See SORTILEGE, DIVINATION. In drawing lots, each competitor may place his lot (marked) in a receptacle from which a disinterested person draws one, on the owner of which the chance falls ; or, each competitor may draw one of a series of lots, the chance falling upon the person who draws one previously specified. In casting lots, the lots are placed by the competitors in a receptacle which is then shaken until one falls out, the chance falling on its owner.

The lot is cast into the lap, but the whole disposing thereof is of the Lord. Prov xvi. 33.

Gr. λωτοφάγοι ; λωτός the lotus + φαγεῖν to eat.] In the Odyssey, a people visited by Odysseus, who subsisted on the lotus and lived in the dreamy indolence it was supposed to induce (see LOTUS, 1); hence, in later story, a people of North Africa identified as the Homeric lotus-eaters. — lo-toph'a-gous (-gŭs), a. Rare. — lo-toph'a-gous-ly, adv. Rare.

lot'ter-y (lŏt'ẽr-ĭ), n. ; pl. -TERIES (-ĭz). [Prob. fr. It. lotteria. See LOTTO, LOT, n.] 1. A scheme for the distribution of prizes by lot or chance ; esp., a scheme by which one or more prizes are distributed by chance among persons who have paid or promised a consideration for a chance to win them, usually as determined by the numbers on tickets as drawn from a lottery wheel. Three principal forms of lottery have been used : lotto, or the Genoese, or number, lottery, the class, or Dutch, lottery ; and the interest lottery. In the Genoese lottery originating, about 1530, from a form of political election at Genoa) the player wins by choosing one (simplum), two (ambo), three (terno), four (quaterno), or five (quinto) out of five numbers which draw prizes out of the total of 95 tickets drawn. In class lottery (originating early in the 16th century in Holland) the tickets are drawn in certain classes or series, for each of which certain prizes are fixed, increasing in number and value with each class. An interest lottery is one that issues bonds for borrowed money at less than the normal rate of interest, giving chances as the consideration for the low interest. All lotteries are now unlawful under the laws of Great Britain and those of the Federal governments and most of the State governments in the United States.

2. Fig., an affair of chance.

3. Allotment by chance ; thing allotted. Obs. Shak.

4. A game in which prizes are given from a pool to holders of cards matching others reserved for that purpose.

lot'to (lŏt'ō), n. [It. lotto, prop., a lot, of G. origin : cf. F. loto, fr. It. See LOT.] 1. A game played with cards bearing numbers, five in each line, the holder covering a number when it is called by one who draws numbered balls from a bag. The game is won by the player who first covers a line of numbers.

2. Genoese, or number, lottery. See LOTTERY.

lo'tus (lō'tŭs), n. [L. lotus, Gr. λωτός.] 1. In legendary Greek history, the fruit which served as the food of the Lotophagi, or lotus-eaters ; also, the tree bearing this fruit. It is usually identified with Zizyphus lotus, one of the jujube trees, but has also been referred to Rhamnus lotus, to the nettle tree (Celtis australis), and other species. The fruit, as well as the wine made from it, was supposed to cause a state of dreamy content and complete forgetfulness of home and friends.

2. Short for LOTUS TREE.

3. Any of several flowering water plants represented in ancient Egyptian and Hindu art (see ARCHITECTURE, Illust.) : a The Indian, or sacred, lotus (Nelumbo nelumbo) ; hence, esp. in American horticulture, any plant of the genus Nelumbo. b Either of the Egyptian water lilies Castalia lotus and C. cærulea. See EGYPTIAN LOTUS, NELUMBO.

4. Arch. An ornament much used in ancient decoration, notably in certain types of Egyptian capitals, generally asserted to have been suggested by the Egyptian water lily. See ARCHITECTURE, Illust.

5. [cap.] Bot. A large genus of fabaceous herbs or subshrubs having pinnate leaves and red, pink, or white umbellate flowers. The species are widely distributed in temperate regions, many occurring in the western United States. Some are cultivated for ornament, while others, as the bird's-foot trefoil (L. corniculatus), are used for fodder and forage. The mention of the lotus in the Iliad as affording food for horses, and the citations from the early herbalists, probably refer to species of this genus.

lotus berry. The yellow edible fruit of a West Indian malpighiaceous tree (Byrsonima lucida) ; also, this tree.

lo'tus-eat'er, lo'tos-eat'er, n. One of the Lotophagi ; hence, one who gives himself up to indolence and day-dreams. — lo'tus-eat'ing, a. & n.

It extended westward from the Mississippi River to the Rocky Mountains and northward from the Gulf of Mexico to British America.

lou'i-sine' (lōo'ĭ-zēn'), n. [From Louis or Louise, a proper name. Oxf. E. D.] A thin, soft, twilled silk, usually woven in checks or stripes, and used for dresses.

Lou'is Qua-torze' (lōo'ĭ ka-tôrz'). [F., Louis fourteenth.] Of or pertaining to Louis XIV. of France, or his reign (1643–1715) ; designating, resembling, or pertaining to, the style in architecture, decorative art, furniture, etc., prevailing in his time. The architecture was of a more imposing character than that of the preceding reign, with a completer return to the ancient orders and details, which gave to it a cold and regular aspect, with great richness of interior decoration. In furniture, elaborate carving and gilding, inlay as in buhl work, Roman motives in ornamentation, and a combination of straight and curved lines in design are characteristic features. Decorative art was beginning to be florid, and the style called rococo and rocaille was beginning to take shape.

Lou'is Quinze' (kănz'). [F., Louis fifteenth.] Of or pertaining to Louis XV. of France or his reign (1715–74) ; designating, resembling, or pertaining to, the French styles in architecture, furniture, etc., prevailing in his times. In interior ornamentation the straight line and plane surface are often replaced by the irregular curved line and surface. In furniture, curved lines and rich upholstery are characteristic features. See ROCAILLE, ROCOCO. See also ARCHITECTURE, Table.

Lou'is Seize' (sāz'). [F., Louis sixteenth.] Of or pertaining to Louis XVI. or his reign (1774–93) ; designating, resembling, or pertaining to, the style in architecture, furniture, etc., prevailing in his times. Architecture approached more and more the antique, while taking on a greater lightness. Decoration took up again the straight line. Interior ornamentation shows the influence of the recently discovered frescoes of Pompeii and Herculaneum. In furniture, straight lines, light and simple construction, and pastoral motives in ornamentation are characteristic.

Lou'is Treize' (trāz'). [F., Louis thirteenth.] Of or pertaining to Louis XIII. or his reign (1610–43) ; designating, resembling, or pertaining to, the French styles in architecture, furniture, etc., prevailing in his time. The architecture was of developed Renaissance style, but retained much of the Gothic picturesqueness. The designs in furniture are square and angular, and an appearance of podginess, usually accentuated by a horizontal division above the middle, is characteristic.

lounge (lounj), v. i. ; LOUNGED (lounjd) ; LOUNG'ING (loun'jĭng). [Perh. fr. lungis a tall, slow, awkward fellow. Cf. LUNGIS.] 1. To move or act in a lazy or listless way.

2. To spend time lazily, whether lolling or idly sauntering ; to stand, sit, or recline, in an indolent manner.

lounge, n. 1. An idle gait or stroll, or the state of reclining indolently.

2. A place of lounging.

She went with Lady Stock to a bookseller's, whose shop served as a fashionable lounge. Miss Edgeworth.

3. A piece of furniture resembling a sofa, upon which one may lie or recline. Often, in the furniture trade, a couch is distinguished as having one arm, or raised end, and no back ; a lounge, as having one arm and a back ; a sofa, as having two arms and a back.

loung'ing (loun'jĭng), p. a. Of, pertaining to, or suited for, a lounger ; idling ; lazy ; as, a lounging attitude ; a lounging life. — n. Act of lounging. — loung'ing-ly, adv.

loupe (lōop), n. [F.] 1. A gem, esp. a sapphire, of imperfect brilliancy.

2. A magnifying glass.

3. Iron Works. Var. of LOOP.

‖ loup'-ga'rou' (lōo'gà'rōō'), n. ; pl. LOUPS-GAROUS (lōō'gà'rōō'). [F., fr. loup wolf + a Teutonic word akin to E. werewolf.] A werewolf ; a lycanthrope.

loup'ing ill (loup'ĭng ; lōp'ĭng). [From LOUP to leap.] Veter. An enzootic, often fatal, disease of sheep and other domestic animals, of unknown cause. It is characterized by muscular tremors and spasms, followed by more or less complete paralysis. The principal lesion is an inflammation of the membranes covering the brain and spinal cord.

louse (lous), n. ; pl. LICE (līs). [ME. lous, AS. lūs, pl. lȳs ; akin to D. luis, G. laus, OHG lūs, Icel. lūs, Sw. lus, Dan. lus.]

Head Louse (Pediculus capitis) Much enlarged.

1. Any of certain small, wingless, usually flattened insects, parasitic on warm-blooded animals. They constitute two groups : a The true lice, or sucking lice, forming the suborder Anoplura, syn. Parasita, of the order Hemiptera, which live upon mammals and suck their blood. Numerous species infest domestic animals, and three are found upon man : the head louse (Pediculus capitis), living among and attaching its eggs, or nits, to the hairs of the head ; the body louse (P. vestimenti), living on the body and clothes and laying its eggs on the latter ; and the crab louse (Phthirius inguinalis), infesting chiefly the body. b The biting lice, or bird lice, forming the order Mallophaga. Some of these infest mammals, but the majority live on birds, and feed chiefly on the skin, feathers, etc., the mouth parts being adapted for biting, not sucking. They are very annoying and often injurious to their hosts. A number of species occur on domesticated birds, as Menopon pallidum on the fowl, Lipeurus polytrapezius on the turkey, and L. squalidus on ducks.

2. Hence, any of various insects or small arachnids, crustaceans, etc., which live on animals or plants and suck their blood or juices (see FISH LOUSE, CARP LOUSE, WHALE LOUSE, BEE LOUSE, etc.). The plant lice belong to the Aphidiдæ and Psyllidæ, the bark lice, or scale insects, to the Coccidæ (see APHID, SCALE INSECT). The name is extended to certain forms not parasitic (cf. WOOD LOUSE, BOOK LOUSE), on account of their appearance.

louse'wort' (lous'wûrt'), n. a The stinking hellebore ; also, the stavesacre. Obs. The seeds of both these plants were used in ancient times to destroy lice. b The yellow rattle. c Now, generally, any scrophulariaceous plant of the genus Pedicularis, formerly reputed to cause sheep feeding upon them to be subject to vermin ; wood betony.

lous'y (louz'ĭ), a. ; -I-ER (-ĭ-ẽr) ; -I-EST. 1. Infested with lice.

2. Mean ; contemptible ; dirty ; vulgar ; vile.

lout (lout), v. i. & t. [ME. louten, luten, AS. lūtan ; akin to Icel. lūta, Dan. lude, OHG. lūzēn to lie hid.] To bend ; bow ; stoop ; to make obeisance. Archaic or Dial. Brit.

2. Satan as identified with the rebel archangel before his fall; — now used chiefly in the phrase as proud as Lucifer. According to a Semitic myth, the morning star fell from heaven, and it is to this that the fate of the King of Babylon is compared in Is. xiv. 12: "How art thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer, son of the morning!" The legend of the fall of angels, and such passages as Luke x. 18, Rev. ix. 7-10, led to the identification of Lucifer with Satan, as by Tertullian, Origen, and others. The misconception was widespread, and, in English, was fostered by the poetry of Milton.

3. [l. c.] A friction match; — originally applied as a trade name to a particular kind invented in England in 1827, whose active substances were antimony sulphide and potassium chlorate. Called also lucifer match. See MATCH.

lug'mark' (lŭg'märk'), n. [From LUG ear.] A mark cut into the ear of an animal to identify it; an earmark.

Lug'nas-ad, Lug'nas-sad (lo͞o'nȧs-ȧd), n. [Ir. lugnasad the games of Lug or Lugh.] The Gaelic feast of the midsummer sun, held in honor of Lug, the sun god, on August 1st and, like Bealtine (which see), celebrated with bonfires and jollity. Cf. SAMHAIN.

lug'sail' (lŭg'sāl'), or lug, n. [Orig. uncert.; cf. LUG, v.] Naut. A four-sided sail bent to a yard which hangs more or less obliquely on a mast, being slung at about a third or quarter of its length from the forward end, and is hoisted and lowered with the sail. There are four varieties of lugsails, or lugs. In a balance lug (fig. 1 in the Illust.) the foot of the sail is laced to a boom extending forward of the mast or, rarely, there being no boom, the tack is fitted to travel on a horse set in the deck forward of the mast. In either case the sail is not lowered in tacking. In a dipping lug (fig. 2), which is the most common form in large boats, the tack is made fast to the deck forward of the mast and the yard must be dipped and hoisted again on the other side of the mast in tacking. In a standing lug (fig. 3) the tack is made fast to the mast and the yard is not dipped in tacking. In a spritsail lug (fig. 4) the sail is divided below the yard along the line of the mast, the forward portion then being practically a jib or foresail with its tack made fast in the bows and its clew shifted by sheets.

lu-gu'bri-ous (lū-gū'brĭ-ŭs), a. [L. lugubris, fr. lugere to mourn; cf. Gr. Λυγρός sad, Skr. rujˊ to break.] Mournful; indicating sorrow, often ridiculously or feignedly; doleful; as, a whining tone and a lugubrious look.

Crossbones, scythes, hourglasses, and other lugubrious emblems of mortality. Hawthorne.

Syn. — See DOLEFUL.

— lu-gu'bri-ous-ly, adv. — lu-gu'bri-ous-ness, n.

lug'worm' (lŭg'wûrm'), n. [lug a lugworm + worm.] Any of several large marine polychætous annelids having a row of tufted gills along each side of the back, which constitute the genus Arenicola. They burrow in sandy beaches between tide marks, both in America and Europe, and are used for bait.

Lugworm (Arenicola marina). (⅓)

Luke (lo͞ok), n. [L. Lucas, fr. Gr. Λουκᾶς; cf. F. Luc.] 1. Masc. prop. name. L. Lucas (lo͞o'kȧs); F. Luc (lük); It. Luca (lo͞o'kä); Sp. & Pg. Lucas (lo͞o'kȧs); G. Lukas (lo͞o'kȧs). 2. a The Evangelist, a physician and companion of St. Paul, — probably a Gentile. b The Gospel of Luke. See NEW TESTAMENT.

luke'warm' (lo͞ok'wôrm'; 87), a. [Cf. LUKE, a.] Moderately warm; neither cold nor hot; tepid; not ardent; not zealous; cool; indifferent. "Lukewarm blood." Spenser. "Lukewarm patriots." Addison.

An obedience so lukewarm and languishing that it merits not the name of passion. Dryden.

lull (lŭl), v. t.; LULLED (lŭld); LULL'ING. [Akin to OD. lullen to sing to sleep, G. lullen, Dan. lulle, Sw. lulla; all imitative of low and soothing sounds. Cf. LOLL, LOLLARD.] To cause to rest by soothing influences; to compose; calm, soothe; quiet. "To lull him soft asleep." Spenser.

lull, v. i. To become gradually calm; to subside; to cease or abate for a time; as, the storm lulls.

lull, n. 1. The power or quality of soothing; that which soothes; a lullaby. Rare.

2. A temporary cessation of storm or confusion.

lull'a-by' (lŭl'ȧ-bī'), n.; pl. -BIES' (-bīz'). [From LULL, v. t.] 1. A song to quiet babes or lull them to sleep; a soothing refrain.

2. Hence, good night; good-by. Obs. Shak.

Lul'li-an (lŭl'ĭ-ȧn), a. Of or pertaining to the Scholastic philosopher Raymond Lully (1235?–1315), or his teachings, in which he endeavored to show that all truth may be demonstrated by reason. — Lul'li-an-ist, Lul'list, n.

lu'ma-chel (lū'mȧ-kĕl), lu'ma-chel'la (-kĕl'ȧ), lu'ma-chelle' (-shĕl'), n. [It. lumachella, fr. lumachella a little snail, dim. of lumaca a snail, fr. L. limax, -acis.] A grayish brown limestone, containing fossil shells, which reflect a beautiful play of colors; — called also fire marble.

lum'bar (lŭm'bȧr), a. [L. lumbus loin. See LOIN.] Anat. Of, pertaining to, or near, the loins. — *n. A lumbar vertebra or nerve.

lumbar aponeurosis, Anat., the posterior aponeurosis of the transversus abdominis muscle, consisting of three layers. The space between the posterior and middle layers is occupied by the erector spinæ muscle, that between the middle and anterior layers by the quadratus lumborum. — 1. arteries, Anat., four or five pairs of arteries arising from the back of the aorta opposite the lumbar vertebræ, supplying the muscles of the loins, the skin of the sides of the abdomen, and the spinal cord. — 1. fascia. = LUMBAR APONEUROSIS. — 1. ganglion, Anat., one of the small ganglia of the lumbar portion of the sympathetic nerves. — 1. glands, a large group of lymphatic glands in front of the lumbar vertebræ. — 1. nerves, Anat., the spinal nerves of the lumbar region. In man there are five pairs, one pair passing out below each lumbar vertebra. The upper four are united by connecting branches forming the 1. plexus. — 1. prurigo, Veter., a fatal disease of sheep in France, similar to louping ill. Its cause is unknown. It is characterized by nervous symptoms and the frequent appearance of an intense pruritis of the hind quarters. — 1. region. See ABDOMINAL REGIONS. — 1. veins, Anat., four pairs of veins collecting blood from the muscles and integument of the loins and the walls of the abdomen, etc., and emptying into the vena cava. The veins of each side are connected by a longitudinal vein, the ascending lumbar vein. — 1. vertebræ, Anat., the vertebræ situated between the dorsal vertebræ above and the sacrum below. In man there are five such vertebræ.

lum'ber (lŭm'bĕr), n. [From Lombard. See LOMBARD, 2.] 1. A pawnbroker's shop or storeroom; a lombard; hence, a pledge, or pawn, or money lent on it. Obs.

2. [Perh. orig. of articles put in pawn and stored away; or cf. LUMBER, v. i.] Old or refuse household stuff; things cumbrous, or bulky and useless, or of small value; anything superfluous or needlessly cumbrous; sometimes, specif., superfluous flesh.

The heap of Custom-House lumber. Hawthorne.

3. Timber, esp. that sawed or split into boards, planks, staves, etc., and of comparatively small dimensions. In England it is called timber. Chiefly U. S.

lum'ber, v. i.; LUM'BERED (-bĕrd); LUM'BER-ING. [Orig. uncert.; cf. Fries. lomen to limp, to move slowly and stiffly, Sw. dial. loma to walk with slow and heavy steps.] 1. To move heavily or clumsily; to move as if burdened.

2. [Cf. dial. Sw. lomra to resound.] To make a rumbling sound; to rumble.

3. [From LUMBER timber.] To cut logs in the forest, or prepare timber for market. U. S. & Canada.

lum'ber, v. t. [From LUMBER, n., 2.] 1. To heap together in disorder. "Stuff lumbered together." Rymer.

2. To fill or encumber with lumber; as, to lumber a room with tables; to lumber up a story with details

3. [From LUMBER a pledge.] To pawn, or pledge. Obs.

lum'ber-ing, p. pr. & vb. n. of LUMBER. Specif.: vb. n. The business of cutting or getting timber or logs from the forest for lumber. U. S. & Canada.

lum'ber-man (-mȧn), n.; pl. -MEN (-mĕn). One who is engaged in lumbering. U. S. & Canada.

lumber room. A room in which unused furniture or other lumber is kept.

lum'bo- (lŭm'bō-). [L. lumbus loin.] A combining form used to indicate connection with, or relation to, the loins or the lumbar vertebræ.

lum'bo-sa'cral (-sā'krȧl), a. Anat. Pertaining to the lumbar and sacral regions or parts; designating a ligament connecting the last lumbar vertebra and sacrum.

lumbosacral cord or nerve, a nerve formed by the fifth and a branch of the fourth lumbar, which joins the sacral plexus.

lum'bri-ca'les (lŭm'brĭ-kā'lēz), n. pl.; sing. LUMBRICALIS (-lĭs). [NL., fr. L. lumbricus earthworm.] Anat. Small muscles in the palm of the hand and sole of the foot, four in number in each case, each arising from, and accessory to, one of the tendons of the deep flexor, and inserted at the base of the digit to which the tendon passes.

lum'bri-co'sis (-kō'sĭs), n. [NL.; L. lumbricus roundworm + -osis.] Infestation of the intestines with roundworms (esp. Ascaris lumbricoides).

Lum'bri-cus (lŭm'brĭ-kŭs), n. [L. lumbricus earthworm.] Zoöl. A genus of oligochætous worms, including the common earthworms. See EARTHWORM.

lu'men (lū'mĕn), n.; pl. L. LUMINA (-mĭ-nȧ), E. LUMENS (-mĕnz). [L., light, an opening for light.] 1. Photom. a A unit of light flux; the flux through one square centimeter of surface, normal to the lines of flow and situated at a distance of one meter from a light source of unit intensity; the total light flux from a source of unit intensity, divided by $4\pi \times 10^4$. b The light flux through a unit of solid angle, that is, through one square centimeter of surface at one centimeter's distance from a source of unit intensity; the total light flux from a unit source divided by 4π.

2. a Bot. The cavity of a cell within the walls. b Anat. & Zoöl. The cavity or passageway of a tubular organ, as the lumen of a blood vessel or tubular gland.

Lu'mière' proc'ess (lü'myâr'). A process of color photography, invented by Auguste and Louis Lumière of Paris, which uses (in an ordinary camera) a plate having a layer of mixed green, violet, and orange-colored starch grains in front of the sensitive film. The plate, developed as a positive, shows the picture in its original colors. A green object in the field, e. g., reduces the silver of the film behind the green grains only (since the other grains do not transmit green light), and, by developing, this part of the plate becomes transparent behind the green grains, but opaque and black behind the violet and orange. Colored photographs can be printed on paper from such plates.

lu'mi-na-rist (-nȧ-rĭst), n. [Cf. F. luminariste, fr. luminaire illumination.] An artist skillful in light and shade.

lu'mi-na-ry (-rĭ), n.; pl. -RIES (-rĭz). [F. luminaire, OF. also luminarie, LL. luminarium, L. luminare a light or lamp, which was lighted in the churches, a luminary, fr. lumen, luminis, light, fr. lucere to be light, to shine, luz, lucis, light. See LIGHT.] 1. A body that gives light, esp. one of the heavenly bodies. "Radiant luminary." Skelton.

2. An artificial light; an illumination.

3. A source of intellectual "light" or progress.

lu'mi-nate (lū'mĭ-nāt), v. t. [L. luminatus, p. p. of luminare to illumine, fr. lumen light. Cf. LIM.] To illuminate. — lu'mi-na'tion (-nā'shŭn), n. Both Rare.

lu'mi-nesce' (lū'mĭ-nĕs'), v. i. To exhibit luminescence.

lu'mi-nes'cence (-nĕs'ĕns), n. [See LUMINESCENT.] Physics. Any emission of light not ascribable directly to incandescence, and therefore occurring at low temperatures. It may be produced by physiological processes, as in the firefly; by chemical action (chem'i-lu'mi-nes'cence or chem'o-lu'mi-nes'cence); by friction (tri'bo-lu'mi-nes'cence); by electric action (e-lec'tro-lu'mi-nes'cence, such as the glow of gases in vacuum tubes when subjected to electric oscillations of high frequency, or cathode luminescence, as the glow of certain bodies when subjected to cathode rays); by certain bodies while crystallizing (crys'tal-lo-lu'mi-nes'cence); by suddenly warming certain bodies previously exposed to light (ther'mo-lu'mi-nes'cence); or by exposure to light (pho'to-lu'mi-nes'cence, called fluorescence if observed during excitation, phosphorescence if observed after excitation). Luminescence occurring without exposure to light or to any of the forms of external excitation usually necessary to its production is called au'to-lu'mi-nes'cence, and is confined to radioactive substances. See PHOSPHORESCENCE, FIREFLY.

luminescence lamp. Elec. A kind of fluorescent lamp whose illumination is due to an electric discharge in a highly exhausted space.

lu'mi-nes'cent (lū'mĭ-nĕs'ĕnt), a. [L. luminare to illumine + -escent.] Physics. Pertaining to, exhibiting, or adapted for the production of, luminescence.

lu'mi-nif'er-ous (-nĭf'ẽr-ŭs), a. [L. lumen light + -ferous.] Producing light; yielding light; transmitting light; as, the luminiferous ether.

lu'mi-nist (lū'mĭ-nĭst), n. Also F. lu'mi'niste' (lü'mē'-nēst'). Paint. A painter who studies especially the effects of light on colored objects; an impressionist or plein-airist.

lu'mi-nos'i-ty (-nŏs'ĭ-tĭ), n.; pl. -TIES (-tĭz). Quality or state of being luminous; also, a luminous thing.

Luminosity means the brightness with which a color appears to the eye compared with a white surface, which is illuminated simultaneously by the same white light. C. G. Zander.

This word luminosity is also often used by artists in an entirely different sense, they calling color in a painting luminous simply because it presents to the mind the impression of light, not because it actually reflects much light to the eye. O. N. Rood.

3. Drunk. Brit. Slang.

lu'na (lū'nȧ), n. [L.; akin to lucere to shine. See LIGHT, n.; cf. LUNE.] 1. [cap.] Rom. Relig. The moon goddess, represented as driving two horses, and hence patron of races between teams of two. Cf. SOL, SELENE, DIANA, 3 a.

2. a Alchemy. Silver. b Her. Argent; — so called in the blazonry of princes.

3. Eccl. A lunette.

lu'na-cy (lū'nȧ-sĭ), n.; pl. -CIES (-sĭz). [See LUNATIC.] 1. Orig., the kind of insanity which is interrupted by lucid intervals, formerly supposed to be influenced by the changes of the moon; now, any form of unsoundness of mind, except (usually) idiocy (which see); mental derangement or alienation; insanity; madness.

Your kindred shuns your house
As beaten hence by your strange lunacy. Shak.

2. A fit or attack of lunacy. Obs.

Hazard so near us as doth hourly grow Out of his lunacies. Shak.

3. Wild foolishness; extravagant folly; madness; — often used hyperbolically.

The world will never be rid of religious lunacies. Dr. H. More

Syn. — Derangement, craziness, mania, insanity.

Luna moth. A large and beautiful American moth (Tropæa, syn. Actias, luna), having long tails to the hind wings. Its wings are delicate light green, with a stripe of purple along the front edge of the anterior wings, the other margins being edged with pale yellow. Each wing has a transparent spot surrounded by rings of light yellow, blue, and black. The caterpillar commonly feeds on the hickory, sassafras, maple, sweet gum, etc., and spins a thin cocoon in a crumpled leaf.

Luna Moth (Tropæa luna) (⅔) lu'nar (lū'nẽr), a. [L. lunaris, fr. luna the moon. See LUNA; cf. LUNARY.] 1. Of or pert. to the moon; resembling the moon; orbed or crescent; lunate.

2. Measured by the moon's revolutions; as, a lunar day.

3. Influenced by the moon, as in properties. Obs.

4. [See LUNA, 2.] Pertaining to or containing silver.

lunar bone, Anat. & Zoöl., the second bone of the proximal series of the carpus; — called also semilunar, and intermedium. — l. caustic, Med. Chem., silver nitrate, $AgNO_3$, which is prepared to be used as a cautery. — l. consonant. See SOLAR CONSONANT. — l. cycle, the Metonic cycle or the Callippic cycle (see these terms). — l. day. See DAY, n., 2 & 3. — l. dial, an obsolete instrument for showing the hour of night by the shadow of a gnomon in moonlight, similarly to that of the sun on a sundial. — l. distance, the angular distance of the moon from the sun, a star, or a planet used (now rarely) in finding longitude. — l. ecliptic limit, Astron., the space of 12° on the moon's orbit from the node, within which, if the moon happens to be at full, it will be eclipsed. — l. equation, in the Gregorian calendar, the correction for the error of the lunar cycle, as in the epact. — l. horoscope, Astrol., the region where the moon appears when the sun is at the ascending point of the east; the part of fortune. — l. hour, the twenty-fourth part of a lunar day. — l. inequality. a One of many variations in the moon's motion from a true ellipse, caused by the perturbative action of the sun, the planets, etc. b One of the small and nearly inappreciable fluctuations of the magnetic needle from its mean position due to the moon. — l. mansion, any of the 28 divisions of the ecliptic, each of which contains the moon on successive days. — l. method, the method of finding longitude (as of a ship) by comparing the local time of taking a given lunar distance with the Greenwich (or other standard) time as ascertained by "working the lunar." — l. month. See MONTH. — l. observation, an observation of a lunar distance by means of a sextant or circle, with the altitudes of the bodies, and the time, for computing the longitude. — l. star, a star whose geocentric distances from the moon are given in nautical almanacs, to be used in computing longitudes. — l. tables. a Astron. Mathematical data, or tables, for computing the moon's position at any past or future time. b Navig. Tables for correcting an observed lunar distance on account of refraction and parallax. — l. theory, Astron., the theory of the moon's motion as deduced from the law of gravitation. — l. wind, a tidal breeze with a period of half a lunar day, whose source of energy is in the lunar attraction applied through the tides. — l. year. See YEAR.

2. A lunar distance or observation.

lu'nar-di-ur'nal, a. Relating to, or occasioned by, the position of the moon in its daily revolution round the earth.

lu-na're (lū-nā'rē; 115), n.; pl. LUNARIA (-rĭ-ȧ). [NL.] Anat. & Zoöl. The lunar bone.

Lu-na'ri-a (-rĭ-ȧ), n. [NL. See LUNAR, a.] Bot. A small genus of European brassicaceous plants distinguished by the cordate leaves and broad silicles. The species are cultivated under the name of satinpod or honesty.

lu-na'ri-an (-ȧn), a. Of, pert. to, or living in, the moon.

lu-na'ri-an, n. [See LUNAR, LUNA.] 1. A supposed inhabitant of the moon.

2. A student of the moon; formerly, one who ascertained longitude by observing the moon.

lu'nate (lū'nāt) } a. [L. lunatus crescent-shaped, fr.
lu'nat-ed (-nāt-ĕd) } luna the moon.] Crescent-shaped; as, a lunate spot or marking. — lu'nate-ly, adv.

lu'na-tic (lū'nȧ-tĭk), a. [L. lunaticus, fr. luna the moon: cf. F. lunatique. See LUNAR.] 1. Affected with lunacy; moonstruck; now, insane; mad; — used in popular and legal language, but rarely in technical medical language.

Lord, have mercy on my son; for he is lunatic.
Wycliffe (Matt. xvii. 15).

2. Evincing lunacy or insanity; crazy; as, lunatic talk.

3. Affected or influenced by the moon. Obs.

4. Far. Moonblind; moon-eyed. Obs.

5. [Attrib. use of the noun.] Appropriated to, or used by, insane persons; as, a lunatic asylum. Cf. INSANE, a., 2.

lu'na-tic, n. A person affected with lunacy; an insane person, orig. one who had lucid intervals (see LUNACY, 1); a madman, lit. or fig.; a person of unsound mind.

The lunatic, the lover, and the poet, lu-na'tion (lū-nā'shŭn), n. [LL. lunatio. Cf. LUNATE.] Astron. The period of time elapsing between two successive new moons; a synodical month. Its average length is 29 d., 12 h., 44 m., 2.9 s.
Are of imagination all compact. Shak.

lu-na'tum (-tŭm), n.; L. pl. LUNATA (-tȧ). [L., anything crescent-shaped. See LUNATE.] Anat. & Zoöl. a The lunar bone. b In certain amphibia, a carpal bone probably representing the radiale.

lunch (lŭnch; 140), n. [See LUNCHEON.] 1. = LUNCHEON, 1. Obs. or Dial.

2. A luncheon, or light repast. Colloq. & Informal.

3. A portion of food prepared for a lunch.

lunch (lŭnch; 140), v. i.; LUNCHED (lŭncht); LUNCH'ING. To take lunch. — v. t. To provide lunch for.

lunch'eon (lŭn'chŭn), n. [E. dial. luncheon, lunchion, lunshin, a large lump of food, fr. dial. lunch a lump, perh. an alteration of lump.] 1. A piece, esp. of food; a hunk or hunch. Obs. or Dial.

2. a A portion of food, or light repast, taken between meals or as an irregular meal. b An informal or light repast between breakfast and dinner.

lune (lūn), n. [L. luna moon: cf. F. lune. See LUNA.] 1. Anything in the shape of a half moon. Rare.

These dark bands often occupy the greater part of the ring, and appear as "lunes" or sickle-shaped figures U. S. Dept of Agric. Bull.

2. Geom. A crescent-shaped figure bounded by two intersecting arcs of circles, on a plane or a sphere, famous as the first curvilinear figure whose area was accurately determined (by Hippocrates, about 440 B. C., when the central angles of the arcs are as 1 : 2, or 1 : 3, or 2 : 3).

lunes (lūnz), n. pl. [See LUNATIC.] Fits of lunacy or frenzy; crazy or unreasonable freaks. Archaic.

2. A crescent, or half moon. Obs.

3. A crescent-shaped object; as: a An opening in a vault, esp. for a window. b That surface at the upper part of a wall which is partly surrounded by a vault which the wall intersects. This space is often filled by a window, or by several windows; when without windows, it often receives mural painting. c Fort. A fieldwork consisting of two faces, forming a salient angle, and two parallel flanks. d Farriery. A horseshoe having the front semicircular part only. e A blinker or blinder, esp. for a vicious horse. f A watch crystal flattened in the center. g pl. Spectacles. Obs. h A species of convexo-concave lens for spectacles. i Glass Making. = LINNET HOLE. j The hole in a guillotine for the victim's neck. k A crescent-shaped ornament.

4. Ordnance. A ring in the trail plate of a gun carriage, which is passed over the pintle when the gun is limbered up. See MOUNTAIN ARTILLERY, Illust.

5. Eccl. A round crystal case to hold the consecrated Host, and placed in the monstrance; — called also luna.

6. Polish Draughts. The position of two pawns of one color so placed that there is a vacant space behind each and a vacant square between them, where the adversary can place himself.

lung (lŭng), n. [ME. lunge, AS. lungen; akin to D. long, G. lunge, Icel. & Sw. lunga, Dan. lunge, all prob. from the root of E. light. See LIGHT not heavy.] 1. One of the compound saccular organs (usually two in number, sometimes only one) which form the special respiratory organ of air-breathing vertebrates (see RESPIRATION; cf. GILL). In man the lungs are of flattened, somewhat conical shape, suspended freely in and normally occupying the entire lateral parts of the thorax, being attached only at the root, or place where the bronchus, or air tube, and the pulmonary arteries and veins enter. The right lung is divided into upper, middle, and lower lobes; the left lung into only two. Each lung has a broad base resting on the diaphragm, and tapers above to a narrow apex, and is enveloped in a serous coat derived from the pleura. The bronchus, having entered the lung, divides repeatedly, the ultimate branches ending in cavities (infundibula and air cells). The blood vessels form a dense network upon the walls of the air cells, and through their thin walls respiration takes place. The lungs develop as a hollow diverticulum from the ventral wall of the alimentary canal. In the lower vertebrates, as amphibians, they retain more nearly the saclike condition, the subdivisions of the interior being much less complex than in mammals and birds (see AIR BLADDER, 1).

2. A somewhat analogous saccular respiratory organ of certain air-breathing invertebrates, as in pulmonate gastropods (see PULMONATA), and in spiders and scorpions, where they contain vascular lamellæ (see BOOK LUNG). These organs are invaginations of the body surface, not connected with the alimentary canal.

lunge (lŭnj), n. [Also spelt longe, fr. allonge. See ALLONGE, LONG.] 1. A sudden thrust or pass, as with a sword. See Illusts. of CARTE, SECONDE, SEPTIME, TIERCE.

2. Act of plunging forward; a leap; as, a lunge of a ship.

lunge, v. i. & t.; LUNGED (lŭnjd); LUNG'ING (lŭn'jĭng).

1. To make, cause to make, or move with, a lunge.

2. To lounge; loiter. Dial. Eng.

lunged (lŭngd), a. Having lungs; pulmonate.

lum'mack (lŭm'ȧk). Var. of lumme. Var. of LOOM.

Lum'mi (lŏom'ĭ), n. One of a self-supporting tribe of Salishan Indians gathered on reservations in Washington.

lump (lŏomp; lŭmp), v. t. [Cf. dial. lamp to beat, Norw. dial. lampa, also OD. lompen, and E. lump, n.] To thresh; to beat severely. Dial. Eng.

lumpen, p. p. of LIMP. Obs.

lump'i-ly (lŭm'pĭ-lĭ), adv. of LUMPY. See -LY.

lump'i-ness, n. See -NESS.

lump'ish-ly, adv. of LUMPING.

lump'kin (lŭmp'kĭn), n. A gawk like Tony Lumpkin.

Lump'kin, To'ny (tō'nĭ). In Goldsmith's "She Stoops to Conquer," Mrs. Hardcastle's son by a former marriage. He is a rough, awkward, ignorant, and idle, but good-hearted, young fellow, spoiled by his indulgent mother and fond of low society and rough practical jokes.

lump'sucker, n. A lumpfish.

lump work. Work undertaken for a lump sum.

lu-nar'di, n. [Said to be after the balloonist V. Lunardi.] A kind of bonnet. Obs. Scot.

lu-na'ri-um (lū-nā'rĭ-ŭm; 115), n. [NL., fr. L. lunaris lunar.] An apparatus for illustrating the motion and phases of the moon.

lu'na-ry, n. [Cf. F. lunaire.] a Any species of Lunaria. b Moonwort. [a half moon. Obs.] lu'na-ry, n. A volvelle; also, lu'na-tel'lus (lū'nȧ-tĕl'ŭs), n. [L. luna moon + tellus earth.] An apparatus for illustrating the astronomical relations of the moon and earth.

lu-nat'i-cal (lū-năt'ĭ-kȧl), a. = LUNATIC. — lu-nat'i-cal-ly, adv.

lunch'eon-less, a. See -LESS.

lund, n. [Cf. Icel. lund mind, temper.] Nature; disposition; behavior. Obs.

Lun'da (lōōn'dȧ), n. One of a Bantu tribe which established a kingdom in the 17th century in the southern basin of the Kongo. They are now mostly subject to the Belgian Kongo.

Lun'di-na'ri-um (lŭn'dĭ-nā'rĭ-ŭm; 115), n. [F. lundi Monday.] = MONDAYLAND.

lune (lūn), n. [See LOYN a leash.] A hawk's leash.

Lu-nel' (lū-nĕl'), n. A kind of rich sweet muscatel wine from Lunel, France.

lunette window. Arch. A window in a lunette.

lung. † LUNGI. [LONG.]

lung (lŏong). Dial. Eng. var. of lung book. Zoöl. = BOOK LUNG.

lunge (lŭnj). Man. Var. of LONGE, n. & v.

lunge (lŭnj), n. [See MUSKELLUNGE; cf. LONGE.] The namaycush.

lun'geous (lŭn'jŭs), a. [lunge a thrust + -ous.] Given to lunging, or thrusting; hence, spiteful; mischievous. Dial. Eng.

lungeteyn, a. [OF. loin(g)tain, F. lointain.] Distant. Obs.

lung'fish' (lŭng'fĭsh'), n. Any fish of the group Dipnoi; — so called because they have a lung or lungs.

lung'-grown', a. Having lungs that adhere to the pleura.

lung sac. The lung of an invertebrate. See LUNG, 2.

lung'-sick', a. Veter. Affected with a form of pneumonia which is chiefly observed in oxen. South Africa.

lung'worm' (lŭng'wûrm'), n. Any of certain nematode worms which infest the lungs and air passages of cattle and other animals.

lung'wort' (-wûrt'), n. 1. Any of several plants once thought helpful in pulmonary diseases, as the black hellebore, the mullein, and the wall hawkweed. Obs. Eng.

2. a A European boraginaceous plant (Pulmonaria officinalis) with hispid leaves and small blue flowers. Its white-spotted leaves were fancied to resemble a diseased lung, and hence the plant, which possesses demulcent properties, came to be used in medicine. b In the United States, the Virginia cowslip, a closely related plant.

3. A foliaceous lichen (Sticta pulmonaria) with a flat, expanded, somewhat lung-shaped thallus, growing on trees and rocks. It has been used as a remedy.

lu'ni-form (lū'nĭ-fôrm), a. [L. luna moon + -form.] Resembling the moon in shape.

lu'ni-so'lar (lū'nĭ-sō'lär), a. [L. luna moon + E. solar: cf. F. lunisolaire.] Resulting from the united action, or pertaining to the mutual relations, of sun and moon.

lunisolar period or year, a period of time at the end of which, in the Julian calendar, the new and full moons and the eclipses recur on the same days of the week and month and year as in the previous period. It consists of 532 common years, being the least common multiple of the numbers of years in the cycles of sun and moon. — 1. precession, Astron., that portion of the annual precession of the equinoxes which depends on the joint action of sun and moon.

lu'ni-tid'al (lū'nĭ-tīd'ăl), a. Pert. to tidal movements dependent on the moon. — lunitidal interval, the interval between the transit of the moon and the time of the lunar high tide next following. See ESTABLISHMENT, 5.

lu'nu-lar (lū'nŭ-lär), a. Lunulate; of or pert. to a lunule.

lu'nu-late (-lāt) } a. [See LUNULE.] Bot. & Zoöl. Relu'nu-lat'ed (-lāt'ĕd) } sembling a small crescent; having crescent-shaped markings.

lu'nule (lū'nūl), n. [F., fr. L. lunula, dim. of luna moon.] 1. Zoöl. & Anat. a A crescent-shaped part or marking, as the whitish mark at the base of the finger nails. b An impressed or modified area in front of the beak on the outside of many bivalve shells. c A small area above the antennæ on the forehead of cyclorrhaphous Diptera.

2. Geom. A lune. See LUNE.

Lu'per-cal (lū'pĕr-kăl; 277), n. [L.] Rom. Antiq. a A grotto at the foot of the Palatine Hill, sacred to Lupercus. b The Lupercalia. Rare. — Lu'per-cal, a. Rare.

Lu-per'ci (lū-pûr'sī), n. pl. [L. Lupercus the Lycean Pan, so called fr. lupus a wolf, because he kept off (arcere) the wolves.] Rom. Relig. The priests of Faunus (apparently worshiped under the name Lu-per'cus (-kŭs), with a wife, Lu-per'ca (-kă), regarded as the deified form of the she-wolf that suckled Romulus and Remus). At the Lu'per-ca'li-a (-lĭ'per-kā'lĭ-ă), Feb. 15, clad only in goat-skins, they made a circuit of the Palatine Hill, striking with goatskin thongs all women encountered, a rite believed to insure fertility and easy delivery. Cf. FAUNUS. — Lu'per-ca'li-an (-ăn), a.

lu-pet'i-dine (lū-pĕt'ĭ-dĭn; -dēn; 184), n. Also -din. [Arbitrarily formed from lutidine.] Org. Chem. Any of the dimethyl derivatives, $C_7H_8(CH_3)_2NH$, of piperidine. They are colorless alkaline liquids.

lu'pin-as'ter (lū'pĭn-ăs'tĕr), n. [NL.; lupine + 2d -aster.] A Siberian species of clover (Trifolium lupinaster) having large purple or white flowers, and leaves somewhat resembling those of lupine.

lu'pine (lū'pĭn; 277), n. [L. lupinus, lupinum; cf. F. lupin.] a A plant of the genus Lupinus. b The seed of this plant, esp. of the white lupine of Europe (L. albus), used as food from earliest times.

Lupine (Lupinus perennis). a Leaves; b Raceme; c Detached Flower; d Pod. a, b, and d, ⅓; c, ½. lu'pine (lū'pīn; 277), a. [L. lupinus, fr. lupus wolf. See WOLF.] Wolfish; ravenous.

lu-pin'i-dine (lū-pĭn'ĭ-dĭn; -dēn; 184), n. Also -din. Chem. An oily, weakly poisonous alkaloid, $C_8H_{15}N$, in the yellow and black lupines.

lu'pin-in (lū'pĭ-nĭn), n. Org. Chem. A glucoside found in the seeds of several species of lupine, and extracted as a yellowish white crystalline substance. By hydrolysis it yields glucose and lupigenin.

lu'pin-ine (-nĭn; -nēn; 184), n. Also -in. Chem. A crystalline, weakly poisonous alkaloid, $C_{10}H_{19}ON$, in the yellow and black lupines.

lu'pi-no'sis (lū'pĭ-nō'sĭs), n. [NL.; lupine + -osis.] Veter. & Med. A disease, marked by fever and prostration, attributed to poisoning by eating lupine.

lu'pin-ous (lū'pĭ-nŭs), a. Relating to the lupines.

lupinous cirrhosis, Veter., a condition of the liver marked by increase of fibrous tissue, due to eating lupine. A similar affection results from eating ragwort and rattlesnake weed.

Lu-pi'nus (lū-pī'nŭs), n. [L., lupine. See LUPINE, n.] Bot. A very large genus of fabaceous herbs, the lupines, distinguished by their digitate or rarely unifoliolate leaves and handsome white, yellow, blue, or purple flowers in long racemes. The species are found throughout North and South America and in the Mediterranean region, but are most abundant in the western United States, where they are frequently poisonous to stock. See LUPINE b.

lu'pous (lū'pŭs), a. Med. Pert. to, or affected with, lupus.

lu'pu-lin (lū'pū-lĭn), n. [NL. lupulus the hop, fr. L. lupus the hop: cf. F. lupulin. Cf. LUPULINE.] a Bot. The fine yellow resinous powder on the strobiles of hops, consisting of small detachable glands attached to the bracts. It is a sedative and digestive tonic. b Chem. A crystalline bitter principle obtained from this powder.

lu'pu-lin'ic (-lĭn'ĭk), a. Pert. to, or obtained from, hops.

lupulinic acid, Chem., lupulic acid.

lu'pus (lū'pŭs), n. [L., a wolf. See WOLF.] 1. Med. A cutaneous disease occurring in several forms, of which lupus erythematosus and lupus vulgaris are the most important varieties; esp., lupus vulgaris. Lupus erythematosus is characterized by an eruption of red patches on the face, esp. in the region of the nose, which become incrusted, leaving superficial scars. The disease spreads slowly and shows no tendency to ulceration. It occurs in middle life and affects most commonly the female sex. L. vulgaris is marked by the development of nodules, esp. on the face, which often ulcerate deeply and produce great deformity. Lu'ther-an (lū'thẽr-ăn), a. Of or pert. to Luther; adhering to the doctrines of Luther or the Lutheran Church.

Lu'ther-an, n. Eccl. Hist. One who accepts or adheres to the doctrines of Luther or the Lutheran Church. The system of faith held by Lutherans is set forth in the Augsburg Confession and in a number of other symbols, known as Luther's catechisms, the Apology of the Augsburg Confession, the Schmalkalden Articles, and the Formula of Concord. The cardinal doctrine is that of justification by faith alone. The sacraments of baptism and the Lord's Supper are held to be channels of grace. They believe that "in the Holy Supper there are present with the elements and are received sacramentally and supernaturally the body and blood of the Lord Jesus Christ," but reject both transubstantiation and consubstantiation, which latter view is attributed to them by some writers. They observe the Christian year, have a liturgy, and are in polity, except in the Scandinavian countries, where they are episcopal, fundamentally congregational, the synodical system, which prevails, being characterized by the conferring of a measure of judicial and executive authority upon the synods by the congregations. The Lutherans constitute a large part of the Protestants of Germany. In Prussia and some of the other German states, the Lutheran and Reformed Churches are united as the Evangelical Church, which is established as the state religion. The Lutheran ly-go'di-um (lī-gō'dĭ-ŭm), n. [NL., fr. Gr. λυγώδης flexible ; λύγος a willow twig + εἶδος form.] Bot. A genus of schizæaceous ferns remarkable for their twining fronds, which bear mostly opposite pairs of pinnæ below and sporophylls above. The species are widely distributed. The only North American species, L. palmatum, is the Hartford fern, or climbing fern. See CLIMBING FERN, Illust.

ly'ing (lī'ĭng), p. a. Supported horizontally ; recumbent.
lying panel, Arch., a panel in which the grain of the wood is horizontal. Rare. — l. press, Bookbinding, a press in which sheets are held by lateral pressure for various steps in backing. — l. wall. = FOOTWALL. — l. weight, a free weight to be placed in a scale, as distinguished from an attached weight ; also, avoirdupois. Obs. Cf. E. D.

ly'ing, n. A place in which birds or animals, esp. game birds, find shelter.

ly'ing-in', n. The state attending, and consequent to, childbirth ; confinement ; also, act of bearing a child.

ly'ing-ly, adv. In a lying manner ; falsely.

lyme grass (līm). a Any grass of the genus Elymus. b The hassock grass.

lymph (lĭmf), n. [L. lympha, for earlier lumpa, water, goddess of water, of uncertain origin ; perh. fr. Gr. νύμφη bride, young girl, nymph, goddess of moisture (cf. NYMPH) : cf. F. lymphe. Cf. LYMPHATIC.] 1. A spring of water ; hence, water, or a pure, transparent liquid like water.

> A fountain bubbled up, whose lymph serene > Nothing of earthly mixture might distain. Trench.

2. The sap of plants. Obs.
3. Anat. A weakly alkaline, nearly colorless coagulable fluid, contained in the lymphatic vessels. It contains colorless corpuscles (see LYMPHOCYTE), but is free from red corpuscles. Lymph may be regarded as consisting chiefly of blood plasma which has exuded from the blood capillaries in the tissues and organs, and has been taken up by the lymphatic vessels to be finally discharged by the thoracic and right lymphatic ducts into the great veins near the heart. Cf. CHYLE.
4. Med. a A fibrinous material exuded from the blood vessels in inflammation. In the process of healing it is either absorbed, or converted into connective tissue binding the inflamed surfaces together. b A fluid containing certain products resulting from the growth of specific micro-organisms upon some culture medium, and supposed to be possessed of curative properties. See KOCH'S LYMPH.

lym'phad (lĭm'făd), n. [Prob. fr. Gael. long-fhada ; long ship + fada long.] A galley or small vessel fitted for both sails and oars, — borne as a charge in heraldry.

lym-phad'e-ni'tis (lĭm-făd'ĕ-nī'tĭs ; lĭm'fă-dĕ-), n. [NL. ; lympho- + adenitis.] Med. Inflammation of the lymphatic glands ; lymphitis.

lym-phad'e-noid (lĭm-făd'ĕ-noid), a. [lympho- + -adeno- + -oid.] Anat. Resembling a lymphatic gland.

lym-phad'e-no'ma (lĭm-făd'ĕ-nō'mă ; lĭm'fă-dĕ-), n. ; L. pl. -MATA (-tă). [NL. ; lympho- + adeno- + -oma.] Med. a Lymphoma. b Lymphosarcoma. c A disease characterized by hyperplasia of the lymphatic glands ; Hodgkin's disease.

lym-phæ'mi-a, lym-phe'mi-a (lĭm-fē'mĭ-ă), n. [NL. ; lympho- + -æmia.] Med. Condition marked by the presence of abnormal quantity of lymphocytes in the blood ; lymphatic leucocythæmia.

lym'pha-gogue (lĭm'fă-gŏg), n. [lympho- + -agogue.] Physiol. A substance which, when injected into the blood, increases the flow of lymph, such as commercial peptone, extract of dried leeches, sugar, and salt.

lym-phan'gi-al (lĭm-făn'jĭ-ăl), a. [See LYMPHANGITIS.] Anat. Of or pertaining to the lymphatic vessels.

lym-phan'gi-ec'ta-sis (-ĕk'tă-sĭs), n. [NL. ; lympho- + angiectasis.] Med. Marked permanent dilatation of the lymphatics. — lym-phan'gi-ec-tat'ic (-ĕk-tăt'ĭk), a.

lym'phan-gi'tis (lĭm'făn-jī'tĭs), n. [NL. ; lympho- + angio- + -itis.] Med. Inflammation of the lymphatic vessels.

lymph'ate (lĭm'fāt), lymph'at-ed (-făt-ĕd), a. [L. lymphatus driven out of one's senses, mad ; perh. fr. Gr. νυμφόληπτος caught by nymphs. See LYMPH.] Lymphatic (in sense 2). Obs. or R.

lym-phat'ic (lĭm-făt'ĭk), a. [L. lymphaticus distracted, frantic : cf. F. lymphatique pertaining to lymph. See LYMPH, LYMPHATE.] 1. Of, pertaining to, containing, or conveying, lymph ; as, lymphatic ducts or vessels.
2. Madly enthusiastic ; frantic. Obs. "Lymphatic rapture." Sir T. Herbert.
3. Designating, or having, a temperament in which the complexion lacks color and the tissues seem to be of loose texture, or hence, a temperament lacking energy or indisposed to exertion or excitement. See TEMPERAMENT.
lymphatic gland, Anat., one of the rounded masses of lymphoid tissue, surrounded by a capsule of connective tissue, which occur in various parts of the body in the course of the lymphatic vessels. They are not true glands, but consist of a reticulum of connective tissue fibers in the meshes of which are contained numerous small round cells, the lymphoid cells, having a large, round, deeply staining nucleus. These cells, when carried off by the lymph flowing through the gland, become lymphocytes. — l. nodule, Anat., a small simple lymphatic gland.

lym-phat'ic, n. 1. Anat. A vessel in which lymph is contained or conveyed ; a lymphatic vessel. The lymphatics originate as interfibrillar or intercellular clefts or spaces in the various tissues and organs, the smaller ones having no distinct walls, or walls composed only of endothelial cells. Larger ones resemble veins in structure. The larger lymphatics are mostly arranged in a superficial set just beneath the skin, and a deep set. They generally have numerous small dilatations, anastomoses, and valves in their course, which is also interrupted by the lymphatic glands (which see). Eventually the various lymphatics enter the thoracic duct and right lymphatic duct, which pour the lymph into the veins.
2. A mad enthusiast ; a lunatic. Obs.

lym'pha-tism (lĭm'fă-tĭz'm), n. [lymphatic + -ism.]
1. The lymphatic temperament.
2. Med. Morbid condition produced by excessive growth of lymphatic tissues.

lymph follicle. Anat. A small rounded mass of dense lymphoid tissue, usually less compact in the central part, occurring isolated, or forming part of a lymphatic gland or other large mass of lymphoid tissue.

lymph heart. Zoöl. A muscular expansion of a lymphatic vessel, near its opening into a vein, and serving by its pulsations to drive the lymph toward the veins. They occur chiefly in the lower vertebrates.

lymph node. Anat. A lymphatic gland.

lym'pho- (lĭm'fō-), lymph-. [See LYMPH.] Combining form used in medicine, physiology, etc., to denote connection with, or relation to, lymph or the lymphatics.

lym'pho-cele (-sēl), n. Med. [lympho- + -cele.] A tumor containing an abnormal amount of lymph.

lym'pho-cyte (-sīt), n. [lympho- + -cyte.] Anat. One of the small colorless, nucleated, amœboid cells found in the lymph and derived from the lymphatic glands (which see) and other lymphoid tissues. They measure about 0.01 mm. in diameter, and consist of a large simple rounded nucleus with a thin layer of surrounding cytoplasm. They become leucocytes when they pass into the blood, but remain, for a time at least, readily distinguishable.

lym'pho-cy-thæ'mi-a, -the'mi-a (-sī-thē'mĭ-ă), n. [NL. ; lymphocyte + -æmia.] Med. Excess of lymphocytes in the blood.

lym'pho-der'mi-a (-dûr'mĭ-ă), n. [NL. ; lympho- + -derma + -ia.] Med. Any affection of the lymphatics of the skin ; specif., an enlargement of the lymphatic glands in leucocythæmia.

lym'pho-gen'ic (-jĕn'ĭk), a. [lympho- + -genic.] Physiol. Connected with, or formed in, the lymphatic glands.

lym-phog'e-nous (lĭm-fŏj'e-nŭs), a. [lympho- + -genous.] Med. Lymph-producing ; lymphogenic.

lymph'oid (lĭm'foid), a. [lymph + -oid.] Anat. a Resembling lymph. b Resembling a lymphatic gland in structure ; adenoid. — lymphoid cells, the characteristic cells of lymphoid tissue. — l. tissue, the characteristic tissue of the lymphatic glands (see LYMPHATIC GLAND), spleen, tonsils, etc., also found diffused or in small ill-defined masses in various parts of the body, esp. in the mucosa of the digestive and respiratory tracts ; — called also adenoid tissue.

lyn'cine (lĭn'sĭn ; -sīn), a. Of or pert. to a lynx; lyncean.

Lyn'don Bar'ry (bär'ĭ lĭn'dŭn). The hero of Thackeray's picaresque novel "The Memoirs of Barry Lyndon," represented as a thoroughgoing scoundrel.

lynx (lĭnks), n. [L. lynx, lyncis, Gr. λύγξ ; akin to AS. lox, G. luchs, D. los ; prob. named from its sharp sight, and akin to E. light. See LIGHT, n. ; cf. OUNCE an animal.]

1. a Any of certain wild cats having relatively long legs, a short stubby tail, and often tufted ears. Their color varies from pale grayish buff to tawny spotted with black. The common lynx of northern Europe is Lynx lynx; that of southern Europe is the pardine lynx (L. pardina). The American lynxes are the Canada lynx (L. canadensis) and allied varieties, which are of northern distribution, of large size, and have very large feet and long fur, and the bobcats, represented by several forms in the United States and northern Mexico, as L. rufus, the bay lynx of the Eastern States, and L. baileyi, L. fasciatus, etc., of the Western States. Cf. CARACAL. b [cap.] Zoöl. The genus consisting of the above animals.

Canada Lynx (Lynx canadensis).

2. [cap.] Astron. A northern constellation, introduced in 1690, between Ursa Major and Auriga. It has only one star brighter than the fifth magnitude.

lynx'-eyed', a. Having acute sight.

Ly-om'er-i (lī-ŏm'ẽr-ī), n. pl. [NL ; Gr. λύειν to loosen + μέρος part.] Zoöl. A small group of very remarkable deep-sea apodal fishes, having the body of soft, fragile structure, the mouth extraordinarily large, the eye minute and near the tip of the snout, the gill arches reduced to five small bars of bone, not attached to the skull, and the skull deficient, esp. in nasal and vomerine elements. Cf. PELICAN FISH, SACCOPHARYNX. — ly-om'er-ous (-ŭs), a. & n.

Ly-o-po'ma-ta (lī'ō-pō'mȧ-tȧ), n. pl. [NL. ; Gr. λύειν to loose + πῶμα, πώματος, a lid.] Zoöl. An order of brachiopods, in which the valves of the shell are not articulated by a hinge. It includes Lingula, Discina, and allied forms. — ly-o-pom'a-tous (-pŏm'ȧ-tŭs ; -pō'mȧ-tŭs), a.

Ly-pe'ri-a (lī-pē'rĭ-ȧ), n. [NL., fr. Gr. λυπηρός causing sorrow, distressing ; — from the dull color of the flowers, which are closed and odorless by day.] Bot. A large genus of South African scrophulariaceous herbs or undershrubs, with yellow or purple flowers having a 5-parted calyx, a corolla with very short limb, and four included stamens. The flowers of L. crocea yield African saffron.

ly'pe-thy'mi-a (lī'pē-thī'mĭ-ȧ ; lĭp'ē-), n. [NL. ; Gr. λύπη grief + θυμός spirit, soul.] Med. Profound melancholy ; great mental prostration.

2. [cap.] Astron. A northern constellation, representing the lyre of Orpheus or Mercury ; the Harp. It contains the white star Vega (α Lyræ), the sixth brightest star in the heavens.

3. Anat. A triangular area of the ventral surface of the corpus callosum between the diverging posterior pillars of the fornix ; — so called from the arrangement of the lines with which it is marked in the human brain.

Ly'ra-id (lī'rȧ-ĭd), Ly'rid (lī'rĭd), n. [Lyra + 1st -id. Cf. LEONID.] Astron. Any of a shower of meteors whose radiant is in the constellation Lyra.

ly'rate (lī'rāt) } a. [NL. lyratus. See ly'rat-ed (-rāt-ĕd) } LYRE.] 1. Bot. Lyre-shaped, or spatulate and oblong, with small lobes toward the base ; as, a lyrate leaf.

Lyrate Leaf.

2. Shaped like a lyre, as the tail of the blackcock or that of the lyre bird, each of which has outwardly curving feathers suggesting the horns of a lyre.

lyre (līr), n. [ME. lire, OF. lire, F. lyre, L. lyra, Gr. λύρα. Cf. LYRA.] 1. Music. A stringed instrument of the harp class used by the ancient Greeks, esp. in accompanying song and recitation (see LYRIC). It consisted of a hollow body, from which were raised two arms curving outward and forward, and joined at the top by a crossbow or yoke, from which gut strings were stretched to the bridge. The strings were stopped with the left hand, and struck with a plectrum in the right. The term has been used also to translate the Greek κιθάρα and φόρμιγξ, and sometimes loosely for harp and for the modern Greek "lyra," a kind of rebec.

2. Music. In some pianofortes, a lyre-shaped frame carrying the pedals.

3. [cap.] Astron. = LYRA.

4. Anat. The lyra of the fornix.

lyre bat. A small bat (Megaderma lyra), of India and Ceylon, having enormous ears and curious nose membranes. It is said to eat frogs.

lyre bird. Any of three species of Australian passerine birds of the genus Menura. The male is remarkable for having the sixteen tail feathers very long and, when spread, during courtship, arranged in the form of a lyre. The lyre bird inhabiting New South Wales (Menura superba) is about the size of a grouse. Its general color is brown, with rufous color on the throat, wings, tail coverts, and tail.

Lyre Bird (Menura superba).

lyre'-tailed' (-tāld'), a. Having a lyrate tail. — lyre-tailed nightjar, a South American nightjar (Hydropsalis forcipata) having a lyrate tail which it opens and shuts while in flight.

lyr'ic (lĭr'ĭk) } a. [L. lyri- Lyre Bird (Menura superba). lyr'i-cal (-ĭ-kăl) } cus, Gr. λυρικός : cf. F. lyrique. See LYRE.] 1. Of or pertaining to a lyre or harp.

2. Suited to be sung to the lyre ; appropriate for song ; as, lyric poetry. Lyric poetry, whether actually sung or not, is generally composed in stanzas, and, as distinguished from epic and dramatic poetry, is expressive of the poet's feeling rather than of outward incident or events, and may take a special form, as ode, sonnet, hymn, roundel, or any of numerous verse schemes, as against a uniform traditional meter such as the hexameter and heroic verse of epic and drama.

ly'sin (lĭ'sĭn), n. [See LYSINE.] Physiol. Chem. Any of a class of substances capable of dissolving bacteria, blood corpuscles, or the like. See BACTERIOLYSIN, HÆMOLYSIN.

ly'sine (lĭ'sĭn ; -sēn ; 184), n. Also ly'sin. [Gr. λύσις a loosing, dissolution.] Physiol. Chem. An organic base, $C_6H_{14}O_2N_2$, formed in the artificial decomposition of protamines and many proteids, and also in tryptic digestion. It forms crystalline salts with silver nitrate and chloroplatinic acid. Chemically, it is a diamino-caproic acid.

Ly-sip'pan (lī-sĭp'ăn), a. Of or pertaining to the Greek sculptor Lysippus (fl. 4th century B. C.) or his school or style. His works are said by ancient writers to have been all in bronze, and are remarkable for their lifelike characterization and careful and accurate execution, shown esp. in the treatment of the hair. His representations of the male human body are said to show a new system of proportions, characterized by a small head and comparatively long arms and legs, which gives the figures an athletic appearance. None of his works have been identified, and only the marble Apoxyomenos in the Vatican can be thought a close copy of one of them.

ly'sis (lĭ'sĭs), n. [NL., fr. Gr. λύσις.] Med. a The resolution or favorable termination of a disease, coming on gradually and not marked by abrupt change, as distinguished from crisis, in which the improvement is sudden and marked. b Action of a lysin ; cell destruction.

M (ĕm). 1. The thirteenth letter of the English alphabet, a voiced (sonant) bilabial consonant formed by stopping the oral passage at the lips, the soft palate being lowered at the same time so that the sound is given a nasal resonance, whence it is classed as a nasal and often designated as labio-nasal. The sound of M is formed with the same position of the lips as are those of p and b, and its relation to them is analogous to that of n to t and d, and of ng to k and g. The letter is silent only when initial before n in words from the Greek. Cf. N, and see Guide to Pron., §196. The letter M came into English from the Greek, through the Latin, being further derived from the Phœnician, and ultimately, perhaps, from the Egyptian. See ALPHABET, Illust. Etymologically M is related to n, as in lime, linden; emmet, ant; also to b.

2. As a symbol, used to denote or indicate: a Twelfth or (cf K, 2 a) thirteenth, as in a series or in order or class; sometimes, the numeral twelve (or thirteen); as, Company M; quire m. b Chem. In formulas, metal (in general). c Magnetism. (1) [cap.] Moment. (2) Strength of pole. d Astron. An early catalogue of about 100 nebulæ published in 1781 by Messier.

3. As a numeral, M stands for 1,000; M̄ for 1,000,000. The original form was ↀ.

4. As an abbreviation: a In the form M.: Various proper names, as Martin, Mary, Matthew, etc.; Majesty; Manslaughter (in former times branded on a person convicted of it when admitted to benefit of clergy); Marshal; Mark (Freemasonry); Marquis; Master; Member; Militia; Mittelhand (Skat); (in the log book) moderate sea or swell (Naut.); Monday; Monsieur; Myopia; (in the catechism) a contraction of NN (names); (in the marriage service) standing for the man's name to be substituted by the reader or speaker (prob. an abbr. of maritus, L., husband, bridegroom). b In the form m. or M.: maiden over (Cricket); main (F., hand); male; manipulus (L., handful); manual; mare; mark or marks (G., money); married; masculine; mass; measure, or by measure; medicine; medium; meridian; meridies (L., noon); [l. c. with hyphen] meta- (Chem.); meter; middle; middle, or center, fielder (Baseball); mile; mill; mille (F., thousand); minim; minute; misce (L., mix); mistura (L., mixture); (in the log book) mist or misty weather (Naut.); modulus; (in dental formulæ) molar; month; moon; morning; mountain; muster.

M, or m (ĕm), n.; pl. M's, or Ms (ĕmz). 1. The letter M, m, or its sound.

2. Something shaped like the letter M.

3. Print. = EM.

mach'i-na'tion (-nā'shŭn), n. [L. machinatio: cf. F. machination.] 1. Act of machinating.

2. That which is devised; a device; a hostile or treacherous scheme; an artful design or plot.

His ingenious machinations had failed. Macaulay.

3. Use or construction of machinery; also, a machine; a mechanical appliance. Obs.

Syn. — See CONSPIRACY.

mach'i-na'tor (măk'ĭ-nā'tẽr), n. [L.] One who machinates; a plotter or artful schemer.

ma-chine' (mă-shēn'; sometimes accented on first syllable in the 17th & early 18th centuries), n. [F., fr. L. machina machine, engine, device, trick, Gr. μηχανή, fr. μῆχος means, expedient. Cf. MECHANIC.] 1. A material construction or erection, the handiwork of a divine or supernatural power.

Thine evermore, most dear lady, whilst this machine is to him, HAMLET. Shak.

2. Hence, a construction or contrivance of a mechanical sort, the work of human hands; specif. (formerly in frequent use), a vehicle or conveyance, as a coach or cart; also, a ship or other boat.

3. Hist. A military engine.

4. a Theater. An apparatus for the production of stage effects; — chiefly in reference to the ancient stage. Cf. DEUS EX MACHINA. b Hence, in reference to literature, any contrivance for dramatic presentation; esp., a supernatural agency or its action.

5. Any device consisting of two or more resistant, relatively constrained parts, which, by a certain predetermined intermotion, may serve to transmit and modify force and motion so as to produce some given effect or to do some desired kind of work; kinematically, a chain with one link fixed (see CHAIN, n., 8). According to the strict definition, a crowbar abutting against a fulcrum, a pair of pliers in use, or a simple pulley block with its fall, would be a machine, but ordinary usage would hardly include such as these; while an implement or tool whose parts have no relative movement, as a hammer, saw, chisel, plane, or the like, would not, of itself, in any case be a machine. Popularly and in the wider mechanical sense, a machine is a more or less complex combination of mechanical parts, as levers, cog and sprocket wheels, pulleys, shafts and spindles, ropes, chains, and bands, cams and other turning and sliding pieces, springs, confined fluids, etc., together with the framework and fastenings supporting and connecting them, as when it is designed to operate upon material to change it in some preconceived and definite manner, to lift or transport loads, etc. A sewing machine, a paper-making machine, a printing machine, a hoisting machine, and a flying machine, are examples. Machines other than those for operating on material are commonly designated by special names, as the particular forms of hoisting machines (cranes, derricks, elevators, etc.), heat and hydraulic engines, hydraulic and pneumatic tools, pumps, etc. A further distinction occurs in engineering practice, machines for shaping, planing, turning, etc., which are operated by power (as by an engine or electric motor), esp. when comprising a large number of intricate parts and partly or wholly automatic in action, being often called machine tools or engine tools, or simply machines or tools. When a machine is employed as a source of mechanical power, as a windmill, an engine, or an electric motor, it is specifically termed a motor. A machine comprising parts which are small and accurately made, as a composite measuring device of precision, is usually called an instrument. Thus a chemical balance is a machine or an instrument, a platform scale for weighing wagons and vehicles is a machine, a wattmeter is an instrument, and so on. Some special machines, as printing presses, are still usually called by the names of their simpler progenitors. Cf. ENGINE, MECHANISM, 3, PRIME MOVER, SIMPLE MACHINES, TOOL.

6. Any person or organization that acts like a machine, as automatically and without intelligence or feeling or through a machinelike distribution of functions; as, he is a mere machine; esp., a combination of persons acting together for a common purpose, with the agencies which they use; as, the social machine.

The whole machine of government ought not to bear upon the people with a weight so heavy and oppressive. Landor.

7. mag'ic (măj'ĭk), n. [OF. magique, L. magice, Gr. μαγική (sc. τέχνη), fr. μαγικός. See MAGIC, a.; MAGI.] 1. The art, or body of arts, which pretends or is believed to produce effects by the assistance of supernatural beings or departed spirits, or by a mastery of secret forces in nature. Magic takes the place of science with primitive and barbarous peoples, usually incorporating what scientific knowledge they possess with a mass of superstitions. It is an integral part of most pagan religions; and its overthrow in Europe is in large part due to Christianity, which condemned resort to spirits and demons for knowledge or assistance (as in witchcraft, sorcery, diabolism), not as false, but as evil, or black magic. On white, or natural, magic no ban was placed, and largely from this — which survives in legerdemain — was developed modern natural science. Magical practices are of three types: Sympathetic magic, based on the principle that like affects like, or that a desired result may be brought to pass by mimicking it, naming it in spells, etc. Divination, the various means of gaining hidden knowledge, as astrology, clairvoyance, augury, sortilege, necromancy, etc. Thaumaturgy, or wonder working, including alchemy, jugglery, legerdemain, and trickery ascribed to demons.

Magic in the strict sense was always felt by the Greeks to be a foreign and specially an Oriental art, as is shown by the very name μάγος, a magician, literally a magian or Persian priest.

Dict. of Bible (Hastings).

Magic constitutes an important part of every religion, some scholars regarding it as the most original element, others as "a disease of religion." Vos (De la Saussaye).

2. The power or potency brought into play by the arts of magic; hence, any seemingly secret or occult power; as, the magic of a great name; or, any insistent or impulsive charm; as, the magic of the painter's art.

mag-nan'ĭ-mous (măg-năn'ĭ-mŭs), a. [L. magnanimus; magnus great + animus mind. See MAGNATE; ANIMUS.] 1. Great of mind; elevated in soul or in sentiment; raised above what is low, mean, or ungenerous; of lofty and courageous spirit.

Be magnanimous in the enterprise. Shak.

2. Dictated by or exhibiting nobleness of soul; honorable; noble; not selfish; as, a magnanimous policy.

Both strived for death; magnanimous debate. Stirling.

mag'nate (măg'nāt), n. [L. (pl.) magnates, magnati, fr. magnus great. See MASTER.] 1. A person of rank; a noble or grandee; a person of influence or distinction. 2. One of the nobility, or certain high officers of state belonging to the noble estate in the national representation of Hungary, and formerly of Poland. 3. A person prominent in the management of a large industry or enterprise; as, an oil magnate. U. S.

mag-ne'sĭ-a (măg-nē'zhĭ-ə, -zhə; -shĭ-ə, -shə; 277), n. [L. Magnesia, fem. of Magnesius of the country Magnesia, Gr. ἡ Μαγνησία λίθος a magnet. Cf. MAGNET, MANGANESE.] 1. Chem. a Magnesium oxide, MgO, a light earthy white substance got by heating magnesium hydroxide or carbonate, by burning magnesium, etc. It is slightly alkaline, and is used as a mild antacid laxative. The ordinary magnesia of the pharmacopœia (light magnesia) is very bulky, but a denser variety (heavy magnesia) is also prepared. b Magnesium (in phrases); as, carbonate of magnesia. Cf. 1st LIME, 2. c Manganese. Obs. 2. Magnesia alba.

magnesia alba. [L.] Pharm. A bulky white amorphous substance, consisting of a hydrous basic carbonate of magnesium, and used as a mild cathartic.

magnesia mixture. Anal. Chem. An ammoniacal solution of a magnesium salt and ammonium chloride. It gives a white precipitate with phosphoric or arsenic acid (or a salt of either).

mag-ne'sian (măg-nē'zhăn; -shĭn), a. Of or pert. to, or characterized by, magnesia or magnesium. — magnesian limestone. = DOLOMITE.

mag-ne'sĭc (-sĭk), a. a Chem. Of, pert. to, or containing, magnesium; as, magnesic oxide. b See PETROGRAPHY.

mag'ne-site (măg'nē-sit), n. [Cf. F. magnésite.] Min. Native magnesium carbonate, $MgCO_3$, in white or light-colored, compact or granular masses, rarely in rhombohedral crystals. H., 3.5–4.5. Sp. gr. of crystals, 3.0–3.1.

mag-ne'sĭ-um (măg-nē'zhĭ-ŭm; -shĭ-ŭm; 277), n. [NL. See MAGNESIA.] Chem. A silver-white metallic element, malleable and ductile, and light (sp. gr., 1.74). Symbol, Mg; at. wt., 24.32. Magnesium occurs abundantly, but always in combination, as in the minerals magnesite, dolomite, brucite, epsomite, spinel, and serpentine, talc, olivine, and other silicates; also in natural waters and in organic products, esp. seeds and bones. The metal is isolated chiefly by electrolysis of fused carnallite (a double chloride of magnesium and potassium). It does not tarnish in dry air. It burns, forming (the oxide) magnesia, with the production of a dazzling, strongly actinic light (magnesium light), which is used in signaling, in pyrotechny, and in photography. For these uses the metal is made into ribbon, wire, and powder. Chemically, magnesium is bivalent, and forms a colorless cation, Mg^{++}.

magnesium carbonate. Chem. A white, crystalline compound, $MgCO_3$, occurring native as magnesite and also prepared artificially; also, any of several basic carbonates obtained as white precipitates. See MAGNESIA ALBA.

magnesium hydroxide. Chem. A compound, $Mg(OH)_2$, occurring native as brucite, and obtained by precipitation as a white, difficultly soluble powder. See BRUCITE.

magnesium lamp. A lamp for burning metallic magnesium. See FLASH LAMP.

magnesium oxide. Chem. Magnesia. See MAGNESIA, 1 a.

magnesium sulphate. Chem. A compound, $MgSO_4$, occurring native as the monohydrate, $MgSO_4{\cdot}H_2O$ (kieserite), but commonly prepared artificially as the heptahydrate, $MgSO_4{\cdot}7H_2O$ (Epsom salts). See EPSOM SALTS.

mag'net (măg'nĕt; 151), n. [ME. magnete, OF. magnete, L. magnes, -etis, Gr. Μαγνῆτις λίθος, Μάγνης λίθος, a magnet, metal that looked like silver, prop., Magnesian stone, Μάγνης a Magnesian, fr. Magnesia, a country in Thessaly. Cf. MAGNESIA.] 1. Loadstone; a variety of magnetite or magnetic iron ore having naturally the property of attracting iron; — called also natural magnet. Hence, fig., something which attracts.

Dinocrates began to make the arched roof of the temple of Arsinoë all of magnet, or this loadstone. Holland.

Two magnets, heaven and earth, allure to bliss,
The larger loadstone that, the nearer this. Dryden.

2. Any body having the characteristic properties of loadstone; specif., a mass of iron or steel having such properties artificially imparted and hence called an artificial magnet; also called, according to its shape, a bar magnet, a horseshoe magnet, etc. A magnet usually has two poles of opposite nature, situated near its ends. When two magnets are brought near each other a repulsion is observed between the poles of like nature, and an attraction between those unlike. The earth is a magnet whose poles are not greatly distant from the geographical poles; consequently, when any magnet is free to turn, like a compass needle, one pole points approximately north, and is hence called the north pole, or, better, the north-seeking pole. It is also called the red, or positive, pole. Similarly the other is called the south, south-seeking, blue, or negative, pole. Soft iron may be temporarily converted into a magnet by contact with a magnet, by induction without contact, or by the influence of an electric current (in which case it is called an electromagnet). For methods of producing permanent steel magnets, see DOUBLE TOUCH, SEPARATE TOUCH, SINGLE TOUCH. A few other substances are capable of becoming magnets of feeble power. See FERROMAGNETIC. See also MAGNETIZE.

mag'net-a'rĭ-um (măg'nĕt-ā'rĭ-ŭm; 115), n. [NL.] Physics. An apparatus for imitating the magnetic conditions of the earth. It consists essentially of three concentric spheres, of which the two inner ones have electric wire coiled about them in a particular way.

mag-net'ic (măg-nĕt'ĭk), a. [L. magneticus: cf. F. magnétique.] 1. Of or pertaining to the magnet; possessing the properties of the magnet, or corresponding properties; as, a magnetic needle. 2. Of or pertaining to, or characterized by, the earth's magnetism; as, the magnetic meridian. 3. Capable of being magnetized, as a metal. 4. Actuated by magnetic attraction; as, a magnetic chuck. 5. Endowed with extraordinary personal attractiveness.

She that had all magnetic force alone. Donne

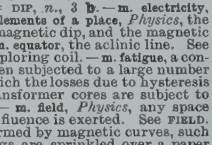
6. Having, susceptible to, or induced by, animal magnetism, so called; as, a magnetic sleep. See MAGNETISM, 4.

magnetic aging. = MAGNETIC FATIGUE. — m. amplitude. = AMPLITUDE, 3 b (2). — m. axis, Physics, the straight line joining the two poles of a magnet; in terrestrial magnetism, the line joining the magnetic poles of the earth. — m. azimuth, an arc of the horizon, intercepted between the magnetic meridian and the vertical circle passing through the object. It is found by observing the object with an azimuth compass. — m. battery, a combination of magnets with the like poles adjacent, so as to act together as one magnet; — called also compound magnet. The power of such a combination is greater than that of a single magnet of the same mass, but less than the total power of the separate pieces. — m. bearing, the bearing by a compass which has no deviation, or the bearing from the magnetic pole. — m. brake, Mach., a brake, as a band brake, operated by an electromagnet. — m. bridge, an instrument for measuring magnetic permeability, similar in principle to Wheatstone's bridge. — m. circuit, the closed path of the magnetic flux, analogous to an electric circuit. — m. circus. Meteor. See BOAR'S HEAD. — m. compensator, a contrivance connected with a ship's compass for compensating or neutralizing the effect of the iron of the ship on the needle. — m. conductivity. = PERMEABILITY, 2. — m. creeping, the slow increase of magnetization under constant magnetizing force; viscous hysteresis. — m. current, the rate of change of the magnetic flux passing through a surface. — m. curves, curves indicating lines of magnetic force, as in the arrangement of iron filings between the poles of a powerful magnet. — m. cycle, a cycle of changes in the magnetism of a body which finally returns to its original state of magnetization. — m. declination or variation. = DECLINATION, n., 8. — m. density, the quantity of magnetism per unit of surface; the number of lines of magnetic force per square centimeter of normal cross section of magnetic field. — m. deviation. = DEVIATION OF THE COMPASS. — m. dip. = DIP, n., 3 b. — m. electricity, magneto-electricity. — m. elements of a place, Physics, the magnetic declination, the magnetic dip, and the magnetic intensity, at that place. — m. equator, the aclinic line. See ACLINIC. — m. explorer, an exploring coil. — m. fatigue, a condition of iron which has been subjected to a large number of magnetic changes in which the losses due to hysteresis become unduly large. Transformer cores are subject to this deteriorating effect. — m. field, Physics, any space through which magnetic influence is exerted. See FIELD. — m. figures, the figures formed by magnetic curves, such as are seen when iron filings are sprinkled over a paper under which is a magnet. — m. fluid, a hypothetical fluid (or either of two such fluids) the existence of which was formerly assumed in the explanations of the phenomena of magnetism. — m. flux, the total number of lines of force within any tube of force, or the product of the magnetomotive force by the permeance of the circuit. See FLUX. — m. force, the force, attractive or repulsive, exerted between two magnetic poles; the force which produces or changes magnetization. Also, the intensity of this force; magnetic flux density. — m. friction. a The retarding effect suffered by a magnetizable body in passing through a magnetic field. b Magnetic hysteresis. — m. gearing, friction gearing in which magnetic attraction is used to prevent slipping. — m. hysteresis. = HYSTERESIS b. — m. inclination. = DIP, n., 3 b. — m. induction. Physics. a See INDUCTION, 6. b Magnetic flux density. See FLUX DENSITY. — m. intensity, magnetic flux density. See FLUX DENSITY. — m. iron, m. iron ore. Min. = MAGNETITE. — m. lag, the failure of the induced magnetism in a magnetic substance to keep up with the inducting or magnetizing force. Cf. HYSTERESIS b. — m. latitude, distance from the aclinic line, or magnetic equator, as measured by the dip of the needle. — m. leak or leakage. = LEAKAGE FLUX. — m. limit, the limit of temperature above which a substance cannot be magnetized. For iron it is from a red to a white heat; for cobalt, far above a white heat; for nickel, about 350° C. (662° F.); for manganese, 15–20° C. (59–68° F.). — magnetic magazine. = MAGNETIC BATTERY. — m. mass, the strength of a magnetic pole, measured by the number of unit poles to which it is equivalent. — m. memory. Physics. a The deviation of a body from normal behavior under magnetization, due to its previous magnetic history. b Magnetic retentiveness. — m. meridian, a vertical circle coinciding in direction with the horizontal needle. — m. moment. = MOMENT OF A MAGNET. — m. needle, a slender bar of magnetized steel which, when suspended so as to be free to turn, either in a horizontal or a vertical direction, or in both, is used to indicate the direction of the earth's magnetism. It constitutes the essential part of a compass, such as the mariner's and the surveyor's. — m. north, the direction indicated by the north-seeking pole of the horizontal magnetic needle. It usually differs from the true north. — m. parallel, an isoclinal line. — m. permeability. = PERMEABILITY, 2. — m. plug, a spark plug containing its own magnetic make-and-break device. — m. polarity, the tendency of a magnetized needle to seek the pole. — m. poles, the poles of a magnet; specif., the magnetic poles of the earth. See MAGNET, 2. — m. potential (at a point), the energy necessary to transpose a unit pole from infinity (where the potential is assumed to be zero) to the point. — m. proof plane, an exploring coil. — m. pyrites. = PYRRHOTITE. — m. quantity. = MAGNETIC MASS. — m. reluctance or resistance, Physics, the resistance offered to the passage of magnetic flux, analogous to electric resistance. — m. remanence. = RESIDUAL MAGNETISM. — m. resistivity, specific reluctance. — m. retardation. = MAGNETIC LAG. — m. retentiveness or retentivity, the power of retaining magnetism after the withdrawal of the magnetizing force, measured by the ratio of the residual magnetism to its previous maximum value. — m. rotation, Physics & Chem., rotation of the plane of polarized light by transparent substances, due to their situation in a magnetic field. The specific magnetic rotation is the amount of the rotation referred to that of water as unity. — m. saturation, the state of maximum magnetization; sometimes, the state of maximum permanent magnetization. — m. screen or shield, a contrivance for shielding something, as a watch, from the action of a magnetic field. It is usually a box or case of soft iron. — m. separator, an apparatus for separating magnetic substances from mixtures by the action of magnets. — m. shell, a theoretical sheet or shell composed of magnetic particles all the north poles of which are on one surface of the sheet and all the south poles on the other. — m. sound. = MAGNETIC TICK. See PAGE EFFECT. — m. spectrum. a Physics. The appearance produced when the cathode rays impinge upon a suitable screen after passing through a magnetic field. When the rays are developed by an interrupted current there are alternating bright and dark bands. b = MAGNETIC FIGURES, above. — m. storm, Terrestrial Physics, any marked disturbance of the earth's magnetic conditions. A connection between sun spots and magnetic disturbances is well established. — m. susceptibility. Physics, the susceptibility of a material to magnetization. — m. telegraph, a telegraph acting by means of a magnet. See TELEGRAPH. — m. tick. See PAGE EFFECT. — m. twist, a twist produced, as in an iron wire, by changes in magnetization and consequent expansion or contraction. — m. valve, Mach., a valve operated by magnetic attraction. — m. vane, either of a pair of vanes of soft iron, one fixed and the other movable, used in certain electrical measuring instruments operating by means of the magnetic repulsion produced between the two. — m. variation. = DECLINATION, n., 8. — m. viscosity, a property of magnetizable substances because of which a certain time is required to produce the maximum effect of a given magnetizing force. — m. whirl, Physics, a motion of the ether about an electric circuit, occurring whenever the current changes intensity. It is regarded as the source of the Hertzian, or electromagnetic, waves.



Magnetic Curves.

mag-net'ĭc (măg-nĕt'ĭk), n. 1. A magnet. Obs. 2. A magnetic substance.

mag-net'ĭ-cal (-ĭ-kăl), a. Magnetic. Now Rare.

mag-net'ĭ-cal-ly, adv. In a magnetic manner; by, or with reference to, magnetism.

mag-net'ĭcs (-ĭks), n. The science of magnetism.

mag'net-ing (măg'nĕt-ĭng), n. Separation of iron from brass, copper, etc., in a mixture of filings, turnings, borings, etc., by the aid of magnets.

mag'net-ĭ-po'lar (măg'nĕt-ĭ-pō'lăr), a. [magnet + polar.] Having magnetic polarity.

mag'net-ism (măg'nĕt-ĭz'm), n. [Cf. F. magnétisme.] 1. Property, quality, or state, of being magnetic; the manifestation of the force in nature which is seen in a magnet. 2. The science which treats of magnetic phenomena. 3. Power to attract; power to excite the feelings and to gain the affections. "The magnetism of interest." Glanvill. 4. Animal magnetism, or mesmerism.

mag'net-ite (măg'nĕt-īt), n. Min. An oxide of iron (Fe_3O_4) occurring in isometric (usually octahedral) crystals, or in massive form, and of an iron-black color and metallic luster. It occurs also as loose sand and in earthy forms. It is strongly attracted by a magnet and sometimes possesses polarity, being then called loadstone. It is an important iron ore. H., 5.5–6.5. Sp. gr., 4.9–5.2. Called also magnetic iron, magnetic iron ore. — mag'net-ĭt'ĭc (-ĭt'ĭk), a.

magnetite lamp. A flaming arc lamp in which the lower (negative) electrode is a steel tube filled with powdered oxide of iron (magnetite). The copper positive electrode is a permanent part of the lamp. The lamp has high efficiency, but is not suitable to indoor use because of fumes.

mag'net-iz'a-ble (-ĭz'ə-b'l), a. Capable of being magnetized. — mag'net-iz'a-bil'ĭ-tĭ, n.

mag'net-ĭ-za'tion (-ĭ-zā'shŭn; -ĭ-zā'shŭn), n. A magnetizing, or state of being magnetized; also, degree to which a body is magnetized; specif., intensity of magnetic force measured by magnetic moment per unit of volume.

mag'net-ize (măg'nĕt-īz), v. t.; MAG'NET-IZED (-īzd); MAG'NET-IZ'ING (-īz'ĭng). 1. To communicate magnetic properties to; to convert into a magnet; as, to magnetize a needle. According to the theory of J. A. Ewing, now generally accepted, the process of magnetizing a body consists in bringing its molecules (themselves minute magnets) into a uniform arrangement as regards their north and south poles.

‖ mag'na est ve'rĭ-tas, et præ'va-le'bit (vē'rĭ-ĭ-tās; prē'-). [L.] Truth is mighty, and will prevail; — the usual form of this maxim, correct grammatically, but a misquotation of 3 Esdras iv. 41, of the Vulgate, where the second verb is in the present tense (prævalet).

mag'ne-cryst-al'lĭc (măg'nē-krĭs-tăl'ĭk), a. Physics. Pertaining to the action of a magnet on a crystalline body. Faraday.

magnanime, a. [F.] Magnanimous. Obs. = [INOUS.]

mag'na-nĭm'ĭ-ous. + MAGNANIMOUS.

mag-nan'ĭ-mous-ly, adv. of MAGNANIMOUS. [-NESS.]

mag-nan'ĭ-mous-ness, n. See ‖ mag'nas in'ter o'pes in'ops. [L.] Poor amid great wealth.

Horace (Odes, III. xvi. 28).

mag'ne-crys-tal'lĭc (măg'nē-krĭs-tăl'ĭk), a. Physics. Pertaining to the action of a magnet on a crystalline body. Faraday.

magnefie. + MAGNIFY.

mag'ne-lec'tric (măg'nē-lĕk'trĭk), a. Magneto-electric. Faraday.

mag-ne'sĭ-o-fer'rĭte (-ō-fĕr'ĭt), n. [magnesio- (for magnesium) + ferrite.] Min. A magnetic oxide of magnesium and iron, $MgFeO_4$, occurring in octahedrons and resembling magnetite. H., 6–6.5. Sp. gr., 4.57–4.64.

mag'net, v. t. To subject to the action of a magnet.

mag-net'ĭc-ness, n. See -NESS.

mag'net-ĭf'er-ous (-măg'nĕt-ĭf'ĕr-ŭs), a. [L. magnes, -etis, magnet + -ferous.] Producing or conducting magnetism.

mag-net'ĭ-fy (măg-nĕt'ĭ-fī), v. t. [magnet + -fy.] To magnetize.

mag'net-ist, n. 1. One versed in 2. A mesmerist. Now Rare.

mag'net-ize, v. i. To become magnetized. Rare.

Demagnetizing consists in destroying this arrangement, the molecules remaining magnets, but with poles directed so that their effects are neutralized. Cf. HYSTERESIS b.

2. To attract as a magnet attracts, or like a magnet; to influence uncontrollably, esp. by charming; to captivate.

Fascinated, magnetized, as it were, by his character. Motley.

3. To bring under the influence of animal magnetism.

magnetizing current, Elec., a current which magnetizes or energizes a magnetic core; exciting current. In a device excited by alternating current, as a transformer, magnetizing current may refer either to the whole exciting current, or only to the part (true magnetizing current) remaining after deducting the power component of current required to supply core losses due to hysteresis and eddy currents.

mag'net-o- (măg'nĕt-ō-; măg-nē'tō-; 277). [See MAGNET.] A prefix meaning pertaining to, produced by, or in some way connected with, magnetism.

mag-ne'to (măg-nē'tō; măg'nĕt-ō), n. Elec. A magneto-electric machine; esp., a magneto-dynamo used to generate the current for the electric ignition in some internal-combustion engines, being operated by the engine itself.

mag'net-o-dy'na-mo, n. A dynamo with permanent field magnets.

mag'net-o-e-lec'tric } a. Physics. Pertaining to, or mag'net-o-e-lec'tri-cal } characterized by, electricity developed by magnets; as, magneto-electric induction.

magneto-electric machine, a machine that generates currents by magneto-electric induction: — now usually limited to those employing permanent magnets, the term dynamo being similarly limited to generators using electromagnets. Called also magneto.

mag'net-o-e-lec-tric'i-ty, n. Electricity developed by means of magnets; also, the science treating of the same. Cf. ELECTROMAGNETISM.

mag'net-o-gen'er-a'tor, n. Elec. A generator with permanent magnets; a magneto.

mag-ne'to-gram (măg-nē'tō-grăm; măg-nĕt'ō-; 277), n. [magneto- + -gram.] Physics. An automatic record of magnetic phenomena made by a magnetograph or the like.

mag'net-om'e-ter (măg'nĕt-ŏm'ē-tĕr), n. [magneto- + -meter: cf. F. magnétomètre.] Physics. a An instrument for measuring the intensity of magnetic forces; also, less frequently, an instrument for determining any of the terrestrial magnetic elements, as the dip and declination. b A kind of galvanometer with a heavy magnetic needle.

mag'net-om'e-try (-trĭ), n. [magneto- + -metry.] Physics. The science of measuring the intensity of magnetic fields and of determining the direction of the lines of force; also, the use of the magnetometer. — mag'net-o-met'ric (măg'nĕt-ō-; măg-nē'tō-mĕt'rĭk), -met'ri-cal (-rĭ-kăl), a.

mag'net-o-mo'tive (măg'nĕt-ō-; măg-nē'tō-mō'tĭv), a. [magneto- + motive, a.] Elec. Pertaining to or designating a force producing magnetic flux, analogous to electromotive force, and equal to the magnetic flux multiplied by the magnetic reluctance.

mag'net-o-op'tics, n. [magneto- + optics.] A branch of physics dealing with the influence of the magnetic field upon light. It treats of such phenomena as the Zeeman effect and the magnetic turning of the plane of polarization. Cf. ELECTROOPTICS. — mag'net-o-op'tic, -op'ti-cal, a.

mag-ne'to-phone (măg-nē'tō-fōn; măg-nĕt'ō-), n. [magneto- + -phone.] Physics. An instrument analogous to the siren, in which the undulatory currents generated by the revolution of a perforated disk in the magnetic field are transmitted to a telephone receiver, producing a note the pitch of which is proportional to the velocity of the disk.

mag'net-o-pho'no-graph, n. A phonograph operated by magneto-electricity; a telegraphone.

mag-ne'to-scope (măg-nē'tō-skōp; măg-nĕt'ō-), n. [magneto- + -scope.] Physics. An instrument for detecting magnetic force.

mag'net-o-stric'tion (măg'nĕt-ō-strĭk'shŭn; măg-nē'tō-), n. [magneto- + L. strictio a drawing together.] Physics. A change in the dimensions of a body when magnetized.

magneto testing bell. An instrument for electrical testing comprising a magneto-generator and bell.

mag'net-o-ther'a-py (măg'nĕt-ō-thĕr'ă-pĭ; măg-nē'tō-), n. [magneto- + therapy.] Med. Treatment of disease by the use of magnets or magnetism.

mag'net-o-trans-mit'ter, n. Any of various magneto-electric machines for transmitting something, as sound, electricity, etc.

magnet wire. Elec. Insulated wire, covered with a single or a double layer of cotton or silk, used for electromagnets, induction coils, etc.

mag-nif'ic (măg-nĭf'ĭk) } a. [L. magnificus: cf. F. ma- mag-nif'i-cal (-ĭ-kăl) } gnifique. See MAGNIFICENT.] 1. Renowned; illustrious. Obs.

2. Magnificent; sublime. "Thy magnific deeds." Milton.

3. Intended to impress; grandiloquent; high-sounding; also, intended to extol; honorific; eulogistic.

4. Royally generous; munificent. Obs.

Mag-nif'i-cat (-ĭ-kăt), n. [L., it magnifies.] 1. The song of the Virgin Mary, Luke i. 46–55; — so called because it commences with this word in the Vulgate.

2. [l. c.] Hence, a song of praise.

mag'ni-fi-ca'tion (măg'nĭ-fĭ-kā'shŭn), n. a A magnifying, or state of being magnified; specif.: a Laudation; exaltation, as by praise. b Apparent enlargement of an object by an optical instrument, esp. as measured in diameters of the object; magnifying power; as, a magnification of 250.

mag-nif'i-cence (măg-nĭf'ĭ-sĕns), n. [F. magnificence, L. magnificentia, fr. magnificus magnificent; magnus great + facere to make. See MAGNITUDE; FACT.] 1. In mediæval ethics, the virtue of unostentatious liberality in expenditure; hence, munificence.

Magnificence, that is to say, when a man doth and performeth great works of goodness that he hath begun. Chaucer.

2. Splendor of physical surroundings or richness in sensuous qualities; also, grandeur; spectacular beauty.

3. Something, as a ceremony, marked by splendor or lavish display. Obs. or R.

4. Glory; exaltation of character or place.

The temple of the great goddess Diana should be despised, and her magnificence should be destroyed. Acts xix. 27.

5. A title applied to various high officers, as to the rector, prorector, and chancellor of a German university.

mag-nif'i-cent (-sĕnt), a. [Cf. OF. magnificent. See MAGNIFICENCE.] 1. Great in deed, or exalted in place; characterized by admirable or splendid achievements; — now used only when applied as an epithet to former famous rulers; as, Sultan Solyman the Magnificent; Lorenzo [de' Medici] the Magnificent.

2. Liberal or lavish in expenditure; munificent. Now R.

Ma-ha-bha'ra-ta (má-hä-bä'rä-tä), n. Also Ma-ha-bha'ra-tam (-tăm). [Skr. Mahābhārata.] The great epic of the Hindus. Its theme is the struggle of two families, the Pandavas and their cousins, the Kauravas, for possession of a kingdom in northern India, the capital of which was near the modern Delhi. The Pandavas are five brothers: Yudhishthira, characterized by firmness and integrity; Bhima, of huge bodily strength, coarse appetites, and fiery temper; Arjuna, the love, generous, and chivalrous, the chief hero of the poem; and the twins, Nakula and Sahadeva, less prominent in the narrative. The Kauravas are the hundred sons of the uncle of the Pandavas, the blind king Dhritarashtra, the leader among them being Duryodhana, bold, crafty, and vindictive. At a public trial of strength, Draupadi, a princess, is won by Arjuna against the Kauravas and all other competitors, and becomes the wife of all five Pandavas. This, and the fact that Dhritarashtra divides his kingdom, giving a part to the Pandavas, causes the Kauravas to lay a plot whereby in a gambling match they cheat their cousins of their kingdom and drive them into exile. After thirteen years, in a great war, the Pandavas overthrow the Kauravas and are reinstated, Bhima slaying Duryodhana. Afterwards, in remorse, they abdicate and set out for Indra's heaven, all falling by the way excepting Yudhishthira, who after many trials arrives there, to find his brothers and Draupadi awaiting him. Together with the epic action is introduced a mass of speculative, social, and ethical discourse. The poem contains about 100,000 stanzas; it dates from the centuries just preceding the Christian Era, while the event it celebrates is placed by scholars in the 12th century B. C.

solete, commanding the sheriff to release a prisoner on receipt of mainprise. c A prisoner's mainpernor or mainpernors. The exact distinction between mainprise and bail is not now known; that given by Blackstone (III. Comm. 128) seems to be incorrect (see Citation below).

We have spoken, perhaps too indifferently, of "mainprise" and of "bail." There was some difference between these two institutions, but at an early time it became obscure. Bail implied a more stringent, mainprise a laxer, degree of responsibility. . . . Whether there has been bail or whether there has been mainprise, the sureties of the 13th century, if they do not produce their man, escape with amercement. Pollock & Mait.

main'sail' (mān'sāl'; naut. mān's'l), n. Naut. The principal sail on the mainmast. In a square-rigged vessel it is the main course and hangs from the main yard. In a fore-and-aft rigged vessel it hoists on the mainmast and is extended by a gaff and boom, a sprit, or the like.

main'sheet' (-shēt'), n. Naut. A rope or sheet by which the mainsail is trimmed and secured. With a fore-and-aft mainsail it is usually a tackle attached to the after end of the boom, one of its blocks having a traveler which slides on a horse at the stern. With a square mainsail it is a rope or purchase attached to the lee clew or, when the wind is aft, to each clew of the sail.

main'spring' (-sprĭng'), n. The principal or most important spring in a piece of mechanism, esp. the moving spring of a watch or clock, or the spring in a gunlock which impels the hammer. Hence: The chief or most powerful motive; the efficient cause of action.

main'stay' (-stā'), n. 1. Naut. The stay extending from the maintop forward, usually to the foot of the foremast. 2. Main support; principal dependence.

The great mainstay of the Church Buckle.

main-tain' (mān-tān'; mĕn-), v. t.; MAIN-TAINED'(-tānd'); MAIN-TAIN'ING. [ME. maintenen, mainteinen, F. maintenir, prop., to hold by the hand; main hand (L. manus) + F. tenir to hold (L. tenere). See MANUAL; TENABLE.] 1. To practice as a matter of habit or custom. Obs.

2. To hold or keep in any particular state or condition, esp. in a state of efficiency or validity; to support, sustain, or uphold; to keep up; not to suffer to fail or decline; as, to maintain a certain degree of heat in a furnace; to maintain a fence or a railroad; to maintain the digestive process or powers of the stomach; to maintain a legal action. 3. To continue or persevere in or with; to carry on; as, to maintain an attack; to maintain a correspondence.

Maintain talk with the duke Shak.

4. To preserve or continue in (a mental attitude or a type or conduct); as, to maintain integrity or reserve; formerly, in reflexive constructions, to conduct or bear (one's self). 5. To bear the expense of; to support; to keep up; to supply with what is needed; as, to maintain one's life.

What maintains one vice would bring up two children. Franklin.

6. To uphold and defend; to support or back (a person in some course or action); to aid systematically; hence, Obs., to give countenance to; to encourage or urge on.

You . . . maintain them [boys] to go upon beggarly excursions. Richard de Bury (Inglis tr.).

7. To keep possession of; to hold and defend; not to surrender or relinquish.

God vales . . . every one as he maintains his post. Grew.

8. To affirm; esp., to assert as true or as subject to proof; also, to support or defend by argument.

It is hard to maintain the truth, but much harder to be maintained by it. South

9. Crim. Law. To aid by way of maintenance.

Syn. — Defend, uphold, support. See ASSERT.

main-tain'er (-ẽr), n. One who maintains; as: a Crim. Law. = MAINTAINOR. b Horol. A maintaining power.

2. That which maintains or supports; means of sustenance; supply of necessaries and conveniences.

Those . . . making learning their maintenance. Swift.

3. Crim. Law. An officious or unlawful intermeddling in a cause depending between others, by assisting either party with money or means with which to carry it on. Cf. CHAMPERTY, 2. A commonly accepted definition of maintenance is "an officious intermeddling in a suit which in no way belongs to one, by maintaining or assisting either party, with money or otherwise, to prosecute or defend it," based upon that of the "Termes de la Ley." A collection of definitions of maintenance is given in Bradlaugh v Newdegate (11 Q. B. D. 1). Maintenance, i. e., assistance rendered in a suit by a stranger to it, without lawful cause T. E. Holland maintenance of way, Railroads, the maintaining in repair of all the fixed property of a road, as track, bridges, etc.

main'top' (mān'tŏp'), n. Naut. The platform about the head of the mainmast in square-rigged vessels.

main yard. Naut. The yard on which the mainsail is extended, supported by its attachments to the mainmast.

ma'i-re (mā'ē-rā; colloq. mī'rē), n. [Maori] Any of several New Zealand trees having dense heavy wood of even texture; as: a Any of several species of Olea; as, O. lanceolata, white maire; O cunninghamii, black maire; O. apetala, broad-leaved maire; O. montana, narrow-leaved maire. b The New Zealand sandalwood. c The myrtaceous tree Eugenia maire.

Syn. — Splendid, sublime, magnificent; imperial, regal, royal; stately, lofty, dignified, elevated. See GRAND.

maj'es-ty (măj'ĕs-tĭ), n.; pl. -TIES (-tĭz). [ME. magestee, F. majesté, L. majestas, fr. an old compar. of magnus great. See MAJOR, MASTER.] 1. Dignity or authority of sovereign power; quality or state which inspires awe or reverence; grandeur; exalted dignity, whether proceeding from rank, character, or bearing; imposing loftiness; stateliness. Majesty (L. majestas) primarily designated the sovereign dignity of the Roman people, esp. as represented by the chief of the state (cf. LESE MAJESTY). Hence it came to designate the rank and dignity of a sovereign or the authority and state of sovereign power.

The Lord reigneth; he is clothed with majesty Ps xciii. 1.

No sovereign has ever represented the majesty of a great state with more dignity and grace. Macaulay

2. Hence [cap.], with a preceding possessive, sometimes also with a qualifying epithet, used as the title of an emperor, empress, king, queen, or other sovereign of equivalent rank. In this construction it often takes the place of a personal pronoun by way of respectful reference or address to royalty; as, Her Majesty; the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty; His Britannic Majesty.

In all the public writs which he [Emperor Charles V.] now issued as King of Spain, he assumed the title of Majesty . . Before that time all the monarchs of Europe were satisfied with the appellation of Highness or Grace Robertson

c To form as a result of calculation, observation, or design; as, to make plans for a house; to make a diagram, a map, or a table of statistics. d To compute to be; to find as a result of calculation; as, he made the weight about fifty pounds; Egyptologists make the beginning of the historic era about 4700 B. C. e To regard or consider as being.

> He is not that goose and ass that Valla would make him. Baker.

f To view or think; to treat in thought or feeling; hence, to act in harmony with mental or emotional regard; — in various special phrases with of; as, to make little, or light, of a difficulty; to make a virtue of necessity; not to know what to make of the news. (This use probably derives part of its meaning from the sense in which make signifies to "act," "behave." Cf. def. 13 and Note.)

g To frame and hold in the mind; as, to make no doubt; to make scruple. h To understand; as, I could make nothing of his words; — hence, to make neither head nor tail of, not to understand in either or any sense. i To amount to, in reason or significance; to form or constitute in reason; to signify; as, that the means makes no matter if the result be good, is a Machiavellian principle.

> The policy of that purpose made more in the marriage than the love of the parties. Shak.

3. To cause to exist, appear, or occur; hence, variously: to create; as, God made the universe; to bring to pass; cause; as, to make a noise; to give rise to; favor; as, prosperity makes contentment; to enact; establish; as, to make laws; to prepare; as, to make a feast; to fix; as, to make a price; to inflict; as, to make a wound.

> Call for Samson, that he may make us sport. Judges xvi. 25.
> Wealth maketh many friends. Prov. xix. 4.
> He accuseth Neptune unjustly who makes shipwreck a second time. Bacon.

4. To bring forth or to give birth to. Obs.

5. To cause to be or become; to put into a given state or condition (expressed by a qualifying noun, verb, or adjective); as, to make known; to make public; to make fast; — often with a complementary object; as, to make some one leader; to make the Word flesh. Hence, specif., to ordain or appoint; as, they made him bishop.

> Who made thee a prince and a judge over us? Ex. ii. 14.

6. To cause or assure the success or prosperity of; to set (one) in the way of fortune; as, he is a made man.

> This is the night
> That either makes me or fordoes me quite. Shak.

7. To train to a requisite standard of efficiency; as, to make a horse, dog, or falcon.

8. To cause (something to happen, or that something happen). Obs. or Archaic.

> The clennesse and the fastinge of us freres > Maketh that Crist accepteth our preyeres. Chaucer.

9. To cause (some one or something to act in a certain way); to constrain or compel (some action, or some person in respect to action); as, to make both ends meet; they made him do penance; his language makes the judicious grieve; money makes the mare go; — sometimes with an ellipsis of an indefinite object, and regularly, in the active voice, with the simple infinitive (without to).

> To be loved makes not to love again. Tennyson.

I hold His Majesty's commission to make to cease a notorious rogue whose name is Thomas Faggus. R. D. Blackmore

10. To perform (the action indicated by the object); to do, act, work, effect, commit, offer, carry on, etc.; as, to make one's abode in the hills; to make a move against the enemy; to make war; to make oath to the truth of a statement; — often with the idea of conduct or behavior paramount; as, to make mischief or love; to make one's excuses or bow; to make mirth or dole (cf. def. 11 b).

> I will neither plead my age nor sickness in excuse of the faults which I have made. Dryden.
> I shall make shift to go without him. Shak.
> [They] made a shift to keep their own in Ireland Milton.

11. a To do; to be engaged or concerned in. Archaic.

> Gomez, what makest thou here? Dryden.

b To act (it); behave; — in the obsolete phrases to make it, to make it strange, to make one's self strange, to make it coy, stout, etc. Cf. MAKE, v. i., 5.

12. To act or behave so as to produce or gain; as, to make acquaintances; to make the acquaintance of some one; to make friends readily; also, to act so as to become; as, to make friends with some one.

13. To so act that (one thing) appears in place (of another), or to cause such action that (one thing) is derived from or formed out (of another); to form by appropriate action or behavior; — with of; as, to make a friend of an enemy; to make an ass of one's self; to make a fool of some one; to make fun, sport, or game of some one.

☞ The senses in which make signifies to "form" or "cause," as well as those in which it means "do," "act," influence many of the phrases used with this construction, but the main idea seems to be the notion of, to "act," the majority of the phrases designating some type of behavior.

14. To prepare, or arrange, to treat in the appropriate fashion for the end designed; as, to make a bed.

15. To perform or execute in the appropriate manner; to draw up; as, to make a bill, a note, a testament.

16. To gain; acquire: as, to make money; to make a profit; to make a living; also, to attain; as, to make a full crop of grain; to make first honors in one's studies; to make the bull's-eye, in target shooting.

17. To go to, accomplish by going, traverse, etc.; specif.: a To betake (one's self) to or toward a destination. Obs., exc. v. i. b To accomplish (a distance) in traveling; as, to make ninety miles an hour. c To reach or arrive at; as, to make connections.

Mal-ap'te-ru'rus (măl-ăp'tĕ-rōō'rŭs), n. [NL.; Gr. μαλακός soft + πτερόν wing + οὐρά tail.] Zoöl. A genus consisting of the electric catfish, syn. of Torpedo (which see).

mal'ar (mā'lăr), a. [L. mala the cheek.] Anat. & Zoöl. Pertaining to the cheek, or the sides of the head. In human anatomy, designating, pertaining to, or in the region of, a small quadrangular bone (usually called the jugal in other animals) forming the prominence of the cheek and part of the outer wall and floor of the orbit as well as part of the zygomatic arch. — n. The malar bone. — malar point, the most prominent point on the malar bone. See CRANIOMETRY, Illust.

ma-la'ri-a (mă-lā'rĭ-ă; 115), n. [It., contr. fr. mala aria bad air. See MALICE; AIR.] 1. Air infected with a noxious substance capable of engendering disease; esp., an unhealthy exhalation from certain soils, as a marsh; miasma.

2. Med. A febrile disease formerly supposed to be due to poisonous exhalations from the soil, but now known to be due to the presence in the red blood corpuscles of animal parasites of the genus Plasmodium. It occurs in attacks or paroxysms, each marked by a chill followed by high fever and sweating, and is usually either intermittent or remittent. There are three principal types of the disease, the tertian, quartan, and æstivo-autumnal fevers, due to different species. See MALARIA PARASITE, ANOPHELES.

ma-la'ri-al (-ăl), ma-la'ri-an (-ăn), ma-la'ri-ous (-ŭs), a. Of or pert. to, or infected by, malaria. — malarial catarrhal fever. See HEARTWATER. — m. fever. = MALARIA, 2.

malaria mosquito. Any mosquito of the genus Anopheles (which see).

malaria parasite. Any of several minute protozoans of the genus Plasmodium (syn. Hæmatozoön) which in their adult condition live in the tissues of mosquitoes of the genus Anopheles (which see) and when transferred to the blood of man, by the bite of the mosquito, produce malaria. The young parasites, or sporozoites, enter the red blood corpuscles, growing at their expense, undergoing sporulation, and finally destroying the corpuscles, thus liberating in the blood plasma an immense number of small spores called merozoites. An indefinite but not unlimited number of such generations may follow, but if meanwhile the host is bitten by a mosquito, the parasites develop into gametes in the stomach of the insect. These conjugate, the zygote thus produced divides, forming spores, and eventually sporozoites, which, penetrating to the salivary glands of the mosquito, may be introduced into a new host. The attacks of the disease coincide with the dissolution of the corpuscles and liberation of the spores and products of growth of the parasites into the blood plasma. Several species of the parasite are distinguished, as P. vivax, producing tertian malaria; P. malariæ, producing quartan malaria; and P. (subgenus Laverania) falciferum, producing æstivo-autumnal fever.

Malaria Parasites. 1, 2, 4 Flagellated Forms, 1 of Tertian, 2 of Quartan, and 4 of Æstivo-autumnal Fever; 3 Crescents. (After Thayer and Hewetson.)

mal'as-sim'i-la'tion (măl'ă-sĭm'Ĭ-lā'shŭn), n. Med. Imperfect assimilation or nutrition.

ma'late (mā'lāt), n. [L. malum apple: cf. F. malate See MALIC.] Chem. A salt or ester of malic acid.

ma'lax (mā'lăks), v. t.; MA'LAXED (-lăkst); MA'LAX-ING. [L. malaxare, malaxatum, Gr. μαλάσσειν, fr. μαλακός soft.] To soften by kneading, rubbing, mixing, or by stirring with some thinner substance, as, especially, drugs in the preparation of plasters and pills. — ma-lax'a-ble (mă-lăk'să-b'l), a.

mal'ax-a'tion (-să'shŭn), n. [L. malaxatio.] 1. The action of softening; specif.: a Pharm. The act of softening by mixing with a thinner substance; the formation of ingredients into a mass for pills or plasters. b A form of massage performed by a kneading movement of the fingers.

2. Zoöl. The method employed by certain wasps to render their prey inactive by biting it on the neck.

mal'ax-a'tor (măl'ăk-sā'tĕr), n. One that malaxates; esp., a machine for grinding, kneading, or stirring into a pasty or doughy mass, as a machine for tempering clay or one for mixing mortar.

Ma-lax'is (mă-lăk'sĭs), n. [NL., fr. Gr. μάλαξις a softening. See MALAX.] Bot. A genus of European terrestrial orchids consisting of M. paludosa, the bog orchis, a small bog herb bearing two leaves and a loose raceme of delicate greenish yellow flowers.

Ma-lay' (mă-lā'; mā'lā), a. Of or pert. to the Malay Peninsula or its inhabitants; Malayan. — Malay apple. a The esculent fruit of a myrtaceous tree (Caryophyllus malaccensis) of Asia and Polynesia; also, the tree. The fruit is about the size and shape of an apple. b The rose apple. — M. camphor. See BORNEOL. — M. kite. = EDDY KITE. — M. race. = MALAYAN RACE. — M. tea. = BENKULEN TEA.

Ma-lay' (mă-lā'; mā'lā), n. 1. A member of the dominant brown race of the region including the Malay Peninsula and the group of islands extending thence to Timor and from Timor north to Luzon, thus including Sumatra, Java, Celebes, the Philippines, and adjacent smaller islands. See MALAYAN RACE.

2. Specif.: A member of the Orang Malayu, or Malay tribes of the Malay Peninsula and parts (chiefly coastal regions) of Sumatra, Borneo, Java, and adjacent small islands. They are skillful seamen and were formerly noted for piracy; inland, they are rice cultivators. They have some native manufactures. Nearly all are Sunni Mohammedans; they use the Arabic character in writing.

3. The language of the Malays. See MALAYO-POLYNESIAN.

4. One of a breed of domestic fowls having a strawberry comb. In the cock the plumage is somewhat like, but darker than, that of the black-breasted red game. The hen is chiefly dark cinnamon brown. Similar bantams, called Malay bantams, are also bred.

Mal'a-ya'lam (măl'ă-yä'lăm), n. The Dravidian language of the Malabar coast of India, an offshoot of Tamil dating from about the 9th century. Its literature is almost exclusively Brahmanical, and it contains a large infusion of Sanskrit words. Originally it employed the Vatteluttu character for its alphabet, but under Hindu influence the Grantha has largely replaced this. See DRAVIDO-MUNDA.

Ma-lay'an (mă-lā'ăn), a. Pertaining to, resembling, or designating, the Malays or their language, customs, etc. Malayan alphabets. The chief Malayan alphabets are the Battak of central Sumatra, the Rejang and the Lampong in southeastern Sumatra, the Bugi and the Makassar in Celebes, the Tagala and the Visaya in the Philippines. Those of Sumatra are probably degraded forms of the old Kawi, while the eastern Malay alphabets, of which Tagala may be taken as the type, are probably derived from early alphabets of the eastern coast of India. — M. bear, the sun bear. — M. camphor. Malay camphor. See BORNEOL. — M. race, Ethnol., one of the five varieties of mankind discriminated by Blumenbach in 1775, and comprising the non-Negritic inhabitants of the Malay Peninsula and Oceania. The typical Malay is short, of slight frame, and brachycephalic. The cheek bones are prominent, and the hair lank, straight, and black; the nose is generally straight, the eyes large and only slightly, if at all, oblique. A peculiar trait of the race is liability to the homicidal mania called amok. In disposition they are brave and courteous, but callous to suffering, indolent, and improvident. The extent and status of the Malayan race is a matter of dispute, many viewing them as a Mongolian offshoot. It is now customary to distinguish them from the linguistically allied Polynesians as well as from the Indonesians, who may be a cross between the two. Cf. MALAYO-POLYNESIAN. — M. subregion, Zoögeog., a subdivision of the Oriental region, including the Malay Peninsula, the Philippine Islands, and the Indo-Malayan Archipelago to Wallace's line.

Ma-lay'o- (mă-lā'ō-). Combining form for Malayan, meaning, of a Malayan character, belonging (in part) to the Malayan race or language; as in Ma-la'yo-In'do-ne'sian, Ma-lay'o-Javʹa-nese', Ma-lay'o-Ne-grit'o.

Ma-lay'oid (-oid), a. Resembling the Malays in type or character; related to the Malays.

Ma-lay'o-Pol'y-ne'sian, a. Pertaining to both the Malays and Polynesians; designating, or belonging to, the linguistic stock which includes these two races.

Malayo-Polynesian languages, a family of agglutinative languages spoken in the area extending from Madagascar in the west to the Malay Peninsula and Archipelago, to Hawaii and Easter Island in the east, and including practically all the native languages of Oceania with exception of the Australian, Papuan, and Negrito languages. These languages fall into three subfamilies, of which some authorities consider the Melanesian, some the Polynesian, as the most archaic. The Malay subfamily is the best developed, having a considerable literary development in some languages, as Javanese. The affinity of the Cham language of Cambodia with the Tagala group, and of the Nicobarese with the Mon-Khmer languages, indicates a possible origin of the Malayo-Polynesian family in East India. Sumatra has also been suggested as a center of origin, esp. of the relatively modern Malay subfamily (see AGGLUTINATIVE LANGUAGES). Following is a classification (p. 1304).

mal'a-co'ma (măl'ă-kō'mă), n. [NL.; malaco- + -oma.] Med. Abnormal softness of a part.

male (māl), a. [F. mâle, OF. masle, mascle, fr. L. masculus male, masculine, dim. of mas a male. Cf. MASCULINE, MARRY, v. t.] 1. a Designating, or of or pertaining to, a man or human being of the sex which begets young, or produces spermatozoa by which the eggs are fertilized, or, in a wider sense, any animal of corresponding sex, or the functions, organs, and parts pertaining esp. to it; — opposed to female. See SEX. b Bot. By analogy, pertaining to or designating any plant organ or reproductive body which accomplishes fertilization or fecundation, or the plant which bears such organs; as, a male gamete, a male gametophyte, a male willow. With respect to seed plants, male is loosely used as an equivalent of staminate.

☞ In Zoöl. & Bot., the male sex is indicated by the symbol of Mars (♂).

2. Suitable to the male sex; characteristic or suggestive of a male; masculine; as, male courage.

3. Consisting of males; as, a male choir.

4. Denoting an intensity or superiority of the characteristic qualities of anything; — contrasted with female.

All its lordly male sapphires. R. Browning.

5. Mech. Adapted for fitting into another corresponding piece (the female piece) which is hollow; as, a male gauge, for gauging the size or shape of a hole; a male screw, etc.

SYN. — MALE, MASCULINE, MANLY, MANNISH, MANLIKE, MANFUL, VIRILE. MALE (opposed to female) applies to animals and plants as well as to human beings, and always suggests sex; MASCULINE (opposed to feminine) denotes that (esp. strength, vigor, and the like) which belongs to or is characteristic of men, and frequently suggests gender rather than sex; as, "a male tiger" (Shak.); "a male tree" (Gilbert White); "male children" (Josh. xvii. 2); a male choir; "His poetry is masculine, plain, concentrated, and energetic" (Lander); "The great and masculine virtues, constancy, gravity, magnanimity, fortitude, fidelity, and firmness" (Burke); a masculine noun. MANLY (often opposed to boyish, childish) commonly suggests a man's finer qualities, esp. courage, frankness, independence; as, "His big manly voice turning again toward childish treble" (Shak.); "What more manly exercise than hunting?" (Walton); "I thought it neither manly nor honorable not to dare farther" (Coleridge); "The truest honor [is] the manly confession of wrong" (Thackeray). MANLIKE is more apt to suggest characteristically masculine qualities or (esp.) foibles; as, manlike bluntness; manlike, he failed to understand her silence. MANNISH (compare the implications of womanish, childish) is a term of contempt; as compared with the corresponding use of masculine, it expresses affected rather than natural qualities; as, "a woman impudent and mannish grown" (Shak.); a mannish costume; "I hate a masculine woman, an Amazon" (Fielding). MANFUL implies esp. bravery or resolution; as, a manful struggle, a manful effort to gain self-control; "I toiled manfully at the review till two o'clock" (Scott). VIRILE (a stronger word than masculine) suggests the qualities belonging to fully developed manhood; as, "Ye chiefly, virile both to think and feel, deep-chested Chapman and firm-footed Ben" (Lowell); a virile style. See FEMALE.

4. Law. The state of mind manifested by an intent to commit an unlawful act; willfulness in the commission of a wrong; esp., malice aforethought, which is any state of mind under which an illegal act is committed without any cause which in law will justify, excuse, or extenuate it. Legal malice, therefore, may, but does not necessarily, consist in malice in fact, or actual malevolence toward the person injured (malice in sense 3 above), or it may consist in implied malice, that is, a depraved or wicked disposition showing itself in utter or wicked recklessness or wanton disregard of the rights of others. The use of the phrase malice aforethought, or its legal equivalent, is, at common law, necessary to the validity of an indictment for murder. It is held, however, that it does not import any definite lapse of time before the commission of the intended act, but only that it must have been deliberately entertained prior to, and at the time of, the commission.

Syn. — Spite, ill will, malevolence, grudge, pique, bitterness, animosity, malignity, maliciousness, rancor, virulence, venom. RESENTMENT.

Syn. — Ill-disposed, evil-minded, mischievous, envious, invidious, spiteful, resentful, bitter, rancorous, virulent, venomous, baleful, sinister, unpropitious. — MALICIOUS, MALEVOLENT, MALIGNANT, MALIGN. That is MALICIOUS which is dictated by hatred or spite; the word is sometimes used to imply a feeling of satisfaction at the failures or misfortunes of others; MALEVOLENT emphasizes evil will, intent, or influence rather than malice in action; as, "How many malicious spies are searching into the actions of a great man" (Spectator); "The malicious remark of the Greek epigrammatist on marriage . . . that its two days of happiness are the first and the last" (Johnson); "I fear I shall be malicious enough to be amused with their . . . lame invectives" (Shelley); "There is no free breath to be drawn within the sphere of so malevolent an influence" (Hawthorne); "Swift's perpetual malevolence to Dryden" (Johnson); "The letter [was] written with malevolence enough" (Cowper). MALIGNANT implies virulence or intense and active ill will; MALIGN (chiefly poetical) connotes esp. baleful influence; as, "If certain critics were as clear-sighted as they are malignant, how great would be the benefit to be derived from their virulent writings!" (Shelley); "Envy is at best a very malignant passion" (Fielding); "The nobler but weaker nature was crushed under a malignant force which was stronger yet meaner than itself" (Froude); "malignant cunning" (Parkman); "planets, rushing from aspect malign" (Milton); "a soul that spurns the crowd's malign control" (Gifford). See PERNICIOUS, POISONOUS, RESENTMENT, SARCASTIC.

mal'le-a-bil'i-ty (măl'ē-ȧ-bĭl'ĭ-tĭ), n. Quality or state of being malleable.

mal'le-a-ble (măl'ē-ȧ-b'l), a. [LL. malleare to hammer: cf. F. malléable. See MALLEATE.] 1. Capable of being extended or shaped by beating with a hammer, or by the pressure of rollers. Many metals are malleable. Gold is the most so, having been beaten into leaves $\frac{1}{200000}$ inch thick. Then follow, in order, silver, copper, tin, platinum, lead, zinc (when hot). Wrought iron and soft steel are malleable, cast iron and hard steel are not. The so-called malleable, or malleableized, cast iron, or, popularly, malleable iron, is cast iron made from a certain variety of pig iron (called in the United States malleable pig iron) suitable for conversion into a crude wrought iron after casting and without subsequent fusion. Malleable castings are made from this pig iron by melting, treating when molten, casting in the ordinary way, and finally treating the brittle product by packing in hematite ore or iron scale and subjecting to heat without fusion. This malleable iron is often simply called malleable in the American iron and steel trade, and the material is sometimes referred to as run steel. The term malleable iron has also the older meaning (still universal in Great Britain) of wrought iron.

2. Susceptible of being fashioned or molded.

malm brick. [See MALM, n.] A kind of high-quality brick of a light brown or yellowish color, made of malm, or marl, usually of an artificial malm of clay and chalk.

mal'mi-gnatte' (măl'mĭ-nyät'), n. [It. malmignatta.] A small black red-spotted spider (Latrodectus malmignattus) of southern Europe, reputed to be very venomous.

Malmignatte (Latrodectus malmignattus). Somewhat enlarged.

malm rock, or malm'stone' (mäm'stōn'), n. a = MALM, 1 a. b A fine-grained siliceous rock belonging to the Upper Greensand or Gault (of the British Cretaceous). It passes into a calcareous variety known as firestone, and also into a micaceous sandstone called gaize. The three together cover a large area in southern England.

malm'sey (mäm'zĭ), n. [Cf. LL malmasetum, ME. malvesie, F. malvoisie, It. malvasia, malvagia; fr. Napoli di Malvasia, or Monemvasia, in the Morea.] a A rich, sweet, aromatic wine, orig. produced in Greece, but now also in Spain, Italy, Madeira, and elsewhere. b The malvasia grape.

mal'nu-tri'tion (măl'nū-trĭsh'ŭn), n. Med. Faulty or imperfect nutrition.

mal-o'dor, mal-o'dour (măl-ō'dẽr), n. An offensive odor.

mal-o'dor-ous (-ŭs), a. Ill-smelling. — mal-o'dor-ous-ly, adv. — mal-o'dor-ous-ness, n.

ma-lon'ic (mā-lŏn'ĭk), a. [Cf. F. malonique. See MALIC.] Org. Chem. Pert. to or designating a white crystalline dibasic acid, $CH_2(CO_2H)_2$, obtained by oxidation of malic acid and otherwise. The malonic esters are of great value in the synthesis of various compounds, owing to the influence of the acid groups upon the CH_2 group, which enables its hydrogen to be replaced by sodium, and that in turn by organic radicals.

mal'o-nyl (măl'ō-nĭl), n. [malonic + -yl.] Chem. The bivalent radical $CH_2·(CO)_2$, of malonic acid. Cf. BENZOYL.

ma'loo (mä'lōō), n., or maloo climber. [Hind. malwal.] An East Indian cæsalpiniaceous climbing shrub (Bauhinia vahlii), which often attains a length of 300 feet. The tough bark is used in the manufacture of ropes.

Mal'o-pe (măl'ō-pē), n. [L., mallow, of Gr. origin.] Bot. A genus of malvaceous annual herbs having tribracteate flowers with longitudinal stigmas. The three species, natives of the Mediterranean region, are all cultivated for their handsome pink or white flowers.

Mal-pigh'i-a (măl-pĭg'ĭ-ă), n. [NL. See MALPIGHIAN.] Bot. A genus of tropical American shrubs typifying the family Malpighiaceæ, having leaves usually covered with stinging hairs, and small white or reddish flowers succeeded by 3-seeded drupes, which are often edible and are called cherries in the West Indies.

Mal-pigh'i-a'ce-æ (-ā'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL.] Bot. A family of tropical herbs or shrubs (order Geraniales), having opposite leaves and yellow or red flowers with a 5-parted glandular calyx and tricarpellary fruit. There are about 54 genera and over 600 species. Some are ornamental climbing vines. — mal-pigh'i-a'ceous (-shŭs), a.

Mal-pigh'i-an (măl-pĭg'ĭ-ăn), a. Anat. & Zoöl. Of, pertaining to, or discovered by, Marcello Malpighi (1628–94), an Italian anatomist.

Malpighian bodies or corpuscles. Anat. a The minute spherical masses in the cortex of the kidney at the extremities of the uriniferous tubules. They consist of a glomerulus of blood vessels, called a Malpighian tuft, surrounded by a membranous envelope, the Malpighian capsule, or capsule of Bowman, which is a small, invaginated, pouch-like expansion of a uriniferous tube. b The small masses of adenoid tissue formed around the branches of the splenic artery in the spleen. — M. cæcum. M. filament, Zoöl., a Malpighian tube. — M. cell, Bot., one of the cells composing the outer coating of the seed in malpighiaceous and some other plants. — M. layer, Anat., the deeper portion of the epidermis, consisting of cells whose protoplasm has not yet changed into horny material. It includes the stratum granulosum and the layers beneath it. — M. pyramid, Anat., one of the conical masses (in man 8 to 18 in number) forming the medullary substance of the kidney and projecting as papillæ into the sinus of that organ. They are composed of bundles of straight uriniferous tubes which open at the apex of the pyramid. — M. tubes or vessels, Zoöl., tubular glands opening into the posterior portion of the alimentary canal in nearly all insects and supposed to function as urinary organs. Similar organs are found in certain myriapods, arachnids, etc. — M. tuft. Anat. See MALPIGHIAN BODIES.

mal'po-si'tion (măl'pō-zĭsh'ŭn), n. Wrong or faulty position, as of the fetus; misplacement.

mal-prac'tice (măl-prăk'tĭs), n. The treatment of a case by a surgeon or physician in a manner contrary to accepted rules and with injurious results to the patient; hence, any professional misconduct or any unreasonable lack of skill or fidelity in the performance of professional or fiduciary duties; wrongdoing. A question of professional malpractice or negligence is determined by what might be reasonably required under the circumstances of the case. — mal'prac-ti'tion-er (măl'prăk-tĭsh'ŭn-ẽr), n.

malt (môlt; mŏlt; 277), n. [AS. mealt; akin to D. mout, G. malz, Icel., Sw., & Dan. malt, and E. melt. See MELT.] 1. A material consisting of grain, generally barley, that has been softened by steeping in water and allowed to sprout. At this stage it is called green malt; this is usually dried in a kiln and sometimes roasted like coffee. The sprouting develops the enzyme diastase, which is capable of saccharifying the starch of the malt and also that of raw grain mixed with it; hence, malt is important in brewing and distilling. See DIASTASE.

2. Malt liquor; beer. Slang or Colloq.

malt, a. Relating to, containing, or made with, malt.

malt, v. t.; MALT'ED; MALT'ING. 1. To convert into malt, or maltlike material; as, to malt barley.

2. To make or treat with malt or malt extract; as, to malt beer; malted milk.

malt, v. i. 1. To become malt or maltlike; also, to make grain into malt.

2. To drink malt liquor. Vulgar.

Mal-tese' (môl-tēz'; -tēs'; mŏl- ; 277), a. Of or pertaining to Malta or its inhabitants.

Maltese cat. A bluish gray variety of the domestic cat. — M. cross. a See CROSS, Illust. b Bot. The scarlet lychnis. c Horol. The star wheel of the ordinary going-barrel stop work. Cant. — M. dog, one of a breed of small lap dogs, having long silky white hair. The breed originated in Malta, and was formerly popular. — M. lace, a heavy silk or cotton pillow lace with patterns of arabesque or geometric forms; made in Malta, France, and England. — M. mushroom, a fleshy parasitic plant of southern Europe (Cynomorium coccineum). See CYNOMORIUM.

Mal-tese', n. a (sing. & pl.) One of the natives of Malta, a people of mixed descent, of the general type of the Mediterranean race. b The native language of the Maltese, an Arabic dialect with Latin and Italian elements. Italian and English are the languages of the "higher" classes.

malt extract. 1. A sugary mucilaginous substance obtained from wort.

2. Also extract of malt. Pharm. A malt infusion evaporated to a honeylike consistence, used in forms of indigestion, as a tonic, and as an emulsifying agent. Commercial malt extracts are, it is said, very or thick beers.

mal'tha (măl'thă), n. [L., fr. Gr. μάλθα.] 1. Any of various cements, some bituminous, others resembling mortar.

2. a A black viscid substance intermediate between petroleum and asphalt; mineral tar. It exhales a strong bituminous odor, and is inflammable. b A variety of ozocerite.

malt house, or malt'house', n. A house in which malt is made; a malting.

Mal-thu'sian (măl-thū'zhăn ; -zĭ-ăn), a. Of or pertaining to the political economist Rev. T. R. Malthus (1766–1834), or conforming or pertaining to his views; as, Malthusian theories. Malthus held: that population tends to multiply faster than its means of subsistence can be made to do, and that when this occurs the lower or weaker classes must suffer from lack of food; that, unless an increase of population be checked by prudential restraint, poverty is inevitable; and that the multiplying of the population will be checked by poverty, vice, or some other cause of suffering.

Mal-thu'sian, n. A believer in Malthusianism.

Mal-thu'sian-ism (-ĭz'm), n. The theory or doctrines of Malthus relating to population.

mal'tolte' (măl'tōlt'), n. [OF. male toute, fr. LL. mala tolta, fr. L. malus bad and tollere to take away.] Eng. Hist. An excessive or unjust tax, esp. a portage in excess of that fixed by custom.

malt'ose (môl'tōs ; mŏl'- ; 277), n. [From MALT.] Chem. A crystalline sugar, $C_{12}H_{22}O_{11}·H_2O$, formed from starch by the action of diastase (as in malt and saliva), and hence important physiologically and in brewing and distilling; malt sugar. It is further formed by the action of diastase on glycogen and of dilute acids on starch. Maltose is dextrorotatory and easily fermentable. It is a disaccharide, yielding on hydrolysis two molecules of dextroglucose.

mal-treat' (măl-trēt'), v. t.; MAL-TREAT'ED; MAL-TREAT'ING. [mal- + treat:] cf. F. maltraiter.] To treat ill; to abuse; to treat roughly.

mal-treat'ment (-mĕnt), n. [Cf. F. maltraitement.] Ill treatment; ill usage; abuse.

malt'ster (môlt'stẽr ; mŏlt'-), n. A maker of malt.

malt'y (môl'tĭ ; mŏl'tĭ), a. Containing, or like, malt; addicted to malt liquor; Slang, drunk. Dickens.

‖ ma'lum (mā'lŭm), n.; pl. MALA (-lă). [L.] An evil. See MALA. — ma'lum in se', pl. MALA IN SE [L.], Law, an offense which is such from its own nature, or by the so-called natural law, irrespective of statute; — opposed to malum prohibitum. — m. pro-hĭ'bi-tum (prō-hĭb'ĭ-tŭm), pl. MALA PROHIBITA [L.], Law, an offense not such of itself, but because prohibited by statute; — opposed to malum in se.

Ma'lus (mā'lŭs), n. [L., apple tree, malum apple, prob. fr. Gr. μῆλον.] Bot. A genus of trees, the apples, typifying the family Malaceæ. It is distinguished from Pyrus (including the pears) by the absence of grit cells in the fruit. The species are natives of the temperate zone. The common apple originated from M. malus.

Ma'lus, n. [L., mast.] Astron. A southern constellation between Puppis and Antlia; the Mast. See ARGO, 2.

Mal'va (măl'vă), n. [L., mallow.] Bot. A genus of Old World herbaceous plants, typifying the family Malvaceæ, having palmately lobed or dissected leaves and pink, purple, or yellow tribracteate flowers with naked carpels. M. sylvestris, the common mallow, and M. rotundifolia, the dwarf mallow, are naturalized in the United States. Also l. c., a plant of this genus.

Mal-va'ce-æ (măl-vā'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL.] Bot. A family of herbs, shrubs, and trees (order Geraniales), the mallow family, characterized by the entire or palmate leaves and showy pentamerous flowers having monadelphous stamens with one-celled anthers. There are about 35 genera and over 700 species, of wide distribution, including Gossypium (cotton), Abelmoschus (okra), Hibiscus, Althæa, Abutilon, Lavatera, etc. — mal-va'ceous (-shŭs), a.

Mal-va'les (-lēz), n. pl. [NL.] Bot. a In Lindley's classification, an alliance comprising the mallows and their allies. — mal'val (măl'văl), a. b An order of archichlamydeous dicotyledonous plants embracing the Malvaceæ, Bombacaceæ, Tiliaceæ, Sterculiaceæ, and four smaller related families. It is characterized by the valvate sepals, the monadelphous or indefinite stamens, and the 3-celled or many-celled ovary.

mal'va-si'a (măl'vă-sē'ă), n. [It. See MALMSEY.] A variety of grape which yields the wine known as malmsey; also, the wine itself. — mal'va-si'an (-sē'ăn), a.

Mal-vas'trum (măl-văs'trŭm), n. [NL., fr. L. malva mallow.] Bot. A large genus of malvaceous herbs and shrubs inhabiting the western United States and South Africa. They have red or yellow flowers with terminal, capitate stigmas, and carpels with ascending seeds.

Mal'va-vis'cus (măl'vă-vĭs'kŭs), n. [NL.; Malva + Hibiscus. Cf. MALVAVISCO.] Bot. A genus of tropical American malvaceous shrubs characterized by the entire or angled leaves and mostly bright scarlet involucrate bell-shaped flowers. M. arboreus is often sold as an abutilon.

mal'ver-sa'tion (măl'vĕr-sā'shŭn), n. [F., fr. malverser to be corrupt in office, fr. L. male ill + versari to move about, to occupy one's self, vertere to turn. See MAL-; VERSE.] Evil conduct; fraudulent practices; misbehavior, corruption, or extortion in office.

Mal-vo'li-o (măl-vō'lĭ-ō), n. The outrageously self-conceited steward to Olivia in Shakespeare's "Twelfth Night." He is readily led to believe that she is in love with him, and makes himself ridiculous by his advances to her.

Mam-bri'no (măm-brē'nō), n. A pagan king in some of the old chivalry romances. He possessed an enchanted golden helmet that rendered the wearer invisible. This was borne away by Rinaldo and was eagerly sought by the paladins of Charlemagne. It owes its celebrity, in a great measure, to the mention of it by Cervantes in "Don Quixote," the knight insisting that the barber's brass basin is the helmet.

Mam'e-luke (măm'ē-lūk), n. [F. mamelouk, cf. Sp. mameluco, It. mammalucco; all fr. Ar. mamlūk a purchased slave or captive; lit., possessed or in one's power, p. p. of malaka to possess.] 1. One of a body of soldiers recruited from slaves converted to Islamism, who, during several centuries, had great political power in Egypt, until exterminated or dispersed by Mehemet Ali in 1811.

2. [l. c.] In Mohammedan countries, a slave.

3. [l. c.] Fig., a fighting slave.

ma-mey' (mā-mā'; -mē'), n. [Haytian mamey.] One of three tropical American trees or their fruits: a The tree Mammea americana or its fruit, the mamey de Santo Domingo of Cuba; — also called mamey apple. See MAMMEA b The marmalade tree or its fruit, the latter called in Cuba mamey sapota or mamey colorado. c The sapodilla.

mam'lat-dar' (măm'lŭt-där'), n. Also mam'lut-dar'. [Bengali māmladdār, fr. Per mu'āmalatdār, Ar. mu'āmalah business + Per. suffix of agency dār.] In the Bombay Presidency, a native civil officer in charge of a taluk, corresponding nearly to the tahsildar in the Northern Provinces. He is directly subordinate to the collector. India.

mam-ma' (mə-mä'; mä'mä; 277: the second pron., common in the U. S., is not recognized in recent British dictionaries), n. Also ma-ma'. [Reduplicated from the infantine word ma, influenced in spelling by L. mamma breast: cf. F. maman.] Mother; — now usually a child's word. "Tell tales to papa and mamma." Swift.

mam'ma (măm'ä), n.; pl. -MÆ (-ē). [L. mamma breast.] Anat. & Zoöl. A glandular organ for secreting milk, characteristic of all mammals, but normally rudimentary in the male; a mammary gland and its accessory parts.

mam'mal (-ăl), n. [See MAMMALIA.] One of the Mammalia.

Mam-ma'li-a (mă-mā'lĭ-ä), n. pl. [NL., fr. L. mammalis (of the breast), mamma breast; or fr. mamma breast, in imitation of L. animalia, pl. of animal animal.] Zoöl. The highest class of vertebrates, including man and all other animals that nourish their young with milk. The Mammalia are warm-blooded, and (except the monotremes) viviparous; their embryos develop an amnion and allantois. Characters peculiar to them are: the skin more or less covered with hairs of peculiar structure (see HAIR), though these are almost wanting in cetaceans; mammary glands; the mandible articulating directly with the squamosal; the ankle joint when present crurotarsal; a chain of small separate ear bones; brain with four optic lobes; a muscular diaphragm separating the heart and lungs from the abdominal cavity; a left aortic arch only; and red blood corpuscles without nuclei (except in the fetus). Although most mammals are terrestrial or arboreal, many are aquatic, as whales, seals, and manatees, and others (the bats) are aërial. The Mammalia are distributed throughout the world, though strictly terrestrial indigenous forms are absent from the Antarctic continent, New Zealand, and much of Polynesia. The earliest undoubted mammalian remains are Jurassic; in the Tertiary they were especially abundant. Their exact ancestry is indetermined, but some consider them descendants of the Theromorpha (which see). They are commonly divided into the subclasses: (1) PROTOTHERIA, containing the Monotremata and extinct Allotheria. (2) METATHERIA, containing only the Marsupialia. (By some this is united with the Eutheria.) (3) EUTHERIA, containing all the remaining orders.

mam-ma'li-an (-ăn), a. Of or pertaining to, or characteristic of, the Mammalia, or mammals.

mam'ma-lif'er-ous (măm'ä-lĭf'ĕr-ŭs), a. [mammal + -ferous.] Geol. Containing mammalian remains.

mam'ma-ry (măm'ä-rĭ), a. Anat. Of or pert. to the mammæ, or breasts. — mammary artery, mammary vein. Anat. See INTERNAL MAMMARY ARTERY and VEIN. — m. fetus, Zoöl., the undeveloped young of a marsupial while still attached to the mamma. — m. gestation, Zoöl., the carrying of imperfectly developed young attached to the mammæ, as in marsupials. — mammary gland, Anat. & Zoöl., one of the two or more large compound glands, characteristic of the Mammalia, which, in the female, secrete milk for the nourishment of the young. They are regarded as highly specialized sebaceous glands, and are always situated on the ventral aspect of the body, varying in number from two to twenty-two. In monotremes they are without nipples. — m. pouch, the marsupium of a monotreme as distinguished from that of a marsupial.

Mam-me'a (mă-mē'ä), n. [NL., fr. Haytian mamey.] Bot. A small genus of clusiaceous trees, natives of America and Asia, characterized by valvate, 2-parted calyx and 2–4-celled ovary becoming a large drupaceous fruit. M. americana, sometimes called tropical apricot, is much cultivated in the West Indies for its large, sweet, yellow fruit (see MAMEY a). The large seeds are anthelmintic. A gum obtained from the bark is used to destroy chigoes.

mam-mif'er-ous (mă-mĭf'ĕr-ŭs), a. [mamma breast + -ferous.] Having breasts, or mammæ; mammalian.

mam-mil'la (mă-mĭl'ä), n.; pl. -LÆ (-ē). [L., better mamilla, dim. of mamma a breast.] Anat. A nipple.

mam'mil-lar (măm'ĭ-lär), a. Mammillary.

Mam'mil-la'ri-a (-lā'rĭ-ä; 115), n. [NL. See MAMMILLA.] a Bot. Syn. of CACTUS, 1. b [l. c.] Hort. Any cactus of the genus Cactus. They are usually of small size, with small cylindrical hairy or spiny joints which are usually tuberculate, giving rise to the name nipple cactus. The flowers are of various shades of red and yellow.

mam'mil-la-ry (măm'ĭ-lā-rĭ), a. [Cf. F. mamillaire. See MAMMILLA.] 1. Of, pert. to, or resembling, a mammilla.

2. Min. Composed of concretions shaped somewhat like breasts; studded with mammiform protuberances.

mammillary process, m. tubercle. See METAPOPHYSIS.

mam'mil-late (-lāt) } a. Having nipples, or small promam'mil-lat'ed (-lāt'ĕd) } tuberances like nipples.

mam'mil-la'tion (-lā'shŭn), n. A mammilliform protuberance.

mam-mil'li-form (mă-mĭl'ĭ-fôrm), a. Nipple-shaped.

mam'mock, v. t.; MAM'MOCKED (-ŭkt); MAM'MOCK-ING. To tear, break, or divide into pieces or fragments. Milton.

mam'mon (măm'ŭn), n. [L. mammona, Gr. μαμμωνᾶς riches, Aramaic mamōnā; cf. Heb. matmōn a hiding place, subterranean storehouse, treasury, fr. tāman to hide.] In the Scriptures, riches; hence [cap.], as a proper name, the demon of cupidity, made by Milton one of the fallen angels, or the god of riches; riches, personified.

> Ye cannot serve God and mammon Matt vi. 24.
> Mammon, the god or prince of this world, that is, the god and prince of usurers and penny-fathers Nash.

mam'mon-ish, a. Actuated or prompted by a devotion to money getting or the service of mammon. Carlyle.

mam'mon-ism (măm'ŭn-ĭz'm), n. Devotion to the pursuit of wealth; the service of mammon; worldliness.

mam'mon-ite (-īt), n. One devoted to mammonism. — mam'mon-it'ish (-ĭt'ĭsh), a.

mam'moth (măm'ŏth), n. [Russ. mámont, mámant.] An extinct elephant (Elephas primigenius), related to, and nearly the same size as, the existing Indian elephant, but differing in its very long, upwardly curving tusks, and long thick hairy coat. Its remains are found in Pleistocene deposits, particularly in Alaska and in Siberia, where its tusks have long been an article of commerce. Several nearly complete specimens with much of the hair and flesh preserved have been found in frozen ground in Siberia. It was probably coeval with prehistoric man. The name is extended to related extinct species. Cf. ELEPHANT, MASTODON.

Restoration of Mammoth. ($\frac{1}{100}$) mam'moth, a. Resembling the mammoth in size; very large; gigantic; as, a mammoth ox. — mammoth clover. = ZIGZAG CLOVER. — m. powder, a large-grained, pressed powder for heavy ordnance. U. S. — m. tree. = BIG TREE.

Mam'mut (măm'ŭt), n. [See MAMMOTH.] Paleon. The principal genus of mastodons (see MASTODON).

mam'my (măm'ĭ), n.; pl. -MIES (-Iz). 1. a Mother; — a child's word. b In the southern United States, a negress nurse or old family servant.

2. The stone roller (Campostoma anomalum).

man (măn), n.; pl. MEN (mĕn), [AS. mann, man, monn, mon; akin to OS., D., & OHG. man, G. mann, Icel. maðr, for mannr, Dan. mand, Sw. man, Goth. manna; cf. Skr. manu, manus.] 1. A human being; an individual of the genus Homo. Man is the highest type of animal existing or known to have existed, but differs from other animals more in his extraordinary mental development than in anatomical structure. Man belongs in the class Mammalia, and modern zoölogists recognize that his structural peculiarities are at most sufficient to justify separating him from the anthropoid apes (family Simiidæ), as a separate family, the Hominidæ, though the older zoölogists regarded him as constituting a separate order (Bimana). But man is not regarded as descended from any existing form of ape, and is believed by some to have become differentiated from the common ancestral type in the Pliocene, by others not until the early Pleistocene, period (cf. PITHECANTHROPUS). He doubtless originated in the Eastern Hemisphere. The main structural characters distinguishing man are: his completely erect posture and gait, from which follow the modification of the feet for walking instead of prehension (the hallux or great toe being nonapposable) and the greater development of certain muscles (as the gluteus maximus and those of the calf) which hold the body erect; the shortness of the arms and the size and perfect apposability of the thumb; the scarcity of hair on most parts of the body; the distinctness of the chin; the comparatively uniform size and even arrangement of the teeth; and most of all, the enormous development of the brain, esp. of the cerebrum, and the smooth rounded skull and high facial angle. Man alone has the power of articulate speech, and largely by reason of this power the capacity of abstract reasoning. Only one human species, Homo sapiens, is generally recognized. Some anthropologists, however, consider the extinct Neanderthal man of western Europe as a separate species (Homo neanderthalensis) intermediate between the Java man (or Pithecanthropus, a distinct genus) and existing races. According to Linnæus, Homo sapiens comprises four varieties or races, the European, Asiatic, African, and American. Blumenbach (1752-1840) distinguished five, Caucasic, Mongolic, Ethiopic, American, and Malay, and this classification is largely followed to-day, although the number is often reduced to four, corresponding to those of Linnæus, or, following de Quatrefages, to three (the Malay and American being treated as of mixed origin, chiefly Mongolic). The number of secondary races varies according to the system of classification. The chief physical traits by which different races are distinguished are the color of the skin, the form of the hair, and the shape of the skull, especially with reference to the cranial and gnathic indices. Of these traits the form of the hair is seemingly the most constant, and classifications of the human species on this trait as fundamental have been made by Haeckel, Huxley, Broca, and F. Müller (see HAIR). See AGE, n., 8; AMERICAN, a., 3 (cf. INDIAN, n., 5); CAUCASIAN, a., 2; ETHIOPIAN, a., 4; MONGOLIAN, a., 2; MALAY, n., 1 & 2; LANGUAGE.

2. The human race; mankind; human beings collectively.

> And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness, and let them have dominion Gen. i. 26.
> The proper study of mankind is man. Pope.

3. The male human being; also, a human being or a male human being, as such, without regard to his accidents of position, office, intellectual qualities, etc.; esp., an adult male person, as distinguished from a woman or a child.

> The king is but a man, as I am. Shak.
> Woman has, in general, much stronger propensity than man to the discharge of parental duties. Cowper.

4. With a, one, or any one, indefinitely; — a modified survival of the Anglo-Saxon man, or mon, as an indefinite pronoun. "A man cannot make him laugh." Shak.

5. One possessing in a high degree the distinctive qualities of manhood; one having manly excellence.

Mancipium was an institution of the jus civile, and a person in mancipio was not regarded as in the possession of the master but rather as his subject. He retained his status as a Roman citizen, was capable of legal marriage, and on manumission regained his full legal rights except that he remained subject to the rights of patronage. The status was created by mancipation, and was obsolete in the time of Justinian.

man'ci-ple (măn'sĭ-p'l), n. [OF. manciple, mancipe, slave, servant, fr. L. mancipium. See MANCIPATE.] 1. A steward or purveyor, as for a college or Inn of Court. Chaucer.
2. A slave; bond servant. Obs.

-man'cy (-măn'sĭ). [Gr. μαντεία divination: cf. F. -mancie.] A suffix denoting divination; as, aleuromancy, chiromancy, necromancy, etc.

Man-dæ'an (măn-dē'ăn), n. [Mandæan mandā knowledge.] 1. Eccl. Hist. A member of a Gnostic sect still extant in western Persia and southern Babylonia, with a hierarchy and literature. The members of the sect are also called Christians of St. John, though it is not Christian.
2. A dialect of Aramaic in which the sacred books of the Mandæans are written; Mandaic.

Man-dæ'an, a. Pertaining to or designating the sect of the Mandæans, or the language of their sacred books.

man'da-ment (măn'dă-mĕnt), n. [L. mandare to command. Cf. MANDMENT.] A command; an injunction.
This remedy is alternately called a "mandament," or a "writ of spolie," or "spoliation." It is a mandament because it is really an order of the court. C. H Van Zyl.

man-da'mus (măn-dā'mŭs), n. [L., we command, fr. mandare to command.] Law. a Orig., in England, any of various ancient prerogative writs or mandates issued by the sovereign and directing the performance of some act; hence, the prerogative writ issued, in the absence of any other legal remedy, from the Crown side of the King's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice (formerly from the Court of King's Bench) in the king's name to a public official, to enforce the performance of some public duty. Hence, in the United States, a common-law writ similarly issued by a superior court and directed to some inferior tribunal, or to some corporation or person, to enforce the performance of some public duty. b By extension, any of various statutory proceedings in the nature of an order of court similarly used.

man-da'mus, v. t.; MAN-DA'MUSED (-mŭst); MAN-DA'MUSING. To serve or coerce with a mandamus. Colloq.

Man'dan (măn'dăn), n. One of a celebrated tribe of Siouan Indians settled on the Fort Berthold Reservation, North Dakota. They are noted for their elaborate ceremonials, including initiatory rites with voluntary torture. In their aboriginal state they were agriculturists as well as hunters, and constructed stockaded villages with log huts. In 1837 smallpox nearly destroyed the tribe.

man'da-rin (măn'dă-rĭn; măn'dă-rēn'; 277), n. [Pg. mandarim, fr. Malay mantrī minister of state, prop. a Hind. word, fr. Skr. mantrin a counselor, mantra a counsel, man to think.] 1. A Chinese public officer of one of the nine grades entitled to wear a button on the hat; a civil or military official in China, or in Annam or other bordering states. The term is properly applied only to the officials called kwan[1] by the Chinese, and not to officials of the subordinate class. The buttons distinguishing the nine ranks of kwan, beginning with the lowest, are: 1st and 2d ranks, a transparent and opaque red stone respectively; 3d and 4th, a transparent and opaque blue stone respectively; 5th and 6th, a transparent and opaque white stone respectively; 7th, plain gold; 8th and 9th, worked gold.
3. A small grotesque seated image in Chinese costume, so made as to continue nodding when set in motion.
4. a A Chinese species of orange (Citrus nobilis); also, any of the horticultural varieties derived from it. b Its fruit. It is much smaller than the common orange, with an easily separable reddish rind and sweet pulp. Cf. TANGERINE. c A liqueur flavored with this fruit.
5. Any of several yellow or orange azo dyestuffs used in dyeing wool and silk. Mandarin G is orange II; mandarin GR is orange R.
6. Short for MANDARIN PORCELAIN.

man'da-rin-ate (măn'dă-rĭn-āt; măn'dă-rēn'āt), n. The body of mandarins; mandarins collectively; the office or dignity of a mandarin; rule of mandarins.

man'da-rin duck (măn'dă-rĭn; măn'dă-rēn'). A beautiful crested Asiatic duck (Aix galericulata), often domesticated, and regarded by the Chinese as an emblem of conjugal affection. It is related to the American wood duck, but has more strikingly variegated plumage, the male having a neck ruff of narrow feathers, and recurved inner secondaries which stand up like fans.

man'da-rin-ism (-ĭz'm), n. Government by mandarins; character or spirit of the mandarins.

man'da-ta-ry (măn'dă-tă-rĭ), n.; pl. -TARIES (-rĭz). [L. mandatarius, fr. mandatum a charge, commission, order. See MANDATE.] One to whom a mandate is given; —chiefly used in Law, as correlative of mandator.

man'date (măn'dāt), n. [L. mandatum, fr. mandare to commit to one's charge, order, orig., to put into one's hand; manus hand + dare to give: cf. F. mandat. See MANUAL, DATE a time; cf. COMMEND, MAUNDY THURSDAY.]
1. An authoritative command; order; injunction.
2. a A prescript from a superior court or official to an inferior one; specif., U. S. Law, the order or command embodying the decision of an appellate court when final judgment is not entered, sent to the court below. b Canon Law. A rescript of the Pope, esp. one commanding preferment to a benefice. c Roman Hist. An order of the emperor to an imperial officer, esp. in the provinces. The mandates are included among the constitutions. d Political Science. The instruction given by a constituency to the elected legislative body or one of its members requiring a certain course of action to be followed.
3. a Roman Law. A contract by which one party agrees to perform gratuitously some act for another who agrees to indemnify him. When not gratuitous it is locatio conductio. b In the Civil-law systems and often in law text writers, any contract of agency in which one undertakes to perform some act for another, whether gratuitously or for a reward. By common-law text writers on bailments, the term is commonly applied to a gratuitous bailment in which the bailee undertakes to do something in respect of the thing bailed, as distinguished from a deposit.
The great distinction then between a mandate and a deposit is, that the former lies in feasance and the latter simply in custody. Sir W. Jones.
Syn. — Command, decree, order, precept, bidding, direction, charge.—MANDATE, BEHEST, INJUNCTION are here compared in their nontechnical uses. MANDATE (chiefly poetical or elevated) denotes an authoritative or peremptory command; BEHEST (also poetical or rhetorical) implies a positive bidding, INJUNCTION, an emphatic admonition or direction, each with the force of a command; as, "Authoritative instructions, mandates issued, which the member is bound blindly and implicitly to obey" (Burke); "Oft, when in my heart was heard thy timely mandate, I deferred the task" (Wordsworth); "pain, danger, difficulty, steady slaving toil, and other highly disagreeable behests of destiny" (Carlyle); "the high injunction not to taste that fruit" (Milton). The species are mostly Mexican, some being known by the name amole. M. virginica occurs in the southern United States; it has a loose spike of greenish flowers. Also [l. c.], a plant of this genus.

man Friday. A person wholly subservient to another, like Robinson Crusoe's servant Friday; a servile follower; a factotum. See CRUSOE, ROBINSON.

man'ful (măn'fo͝ol), a. Showing manliness, or manly spirit; hence, brave; courageous; resolute; noble. "Manful hardiness." Chaucer.

Syn. — See MALE.

man'gan- (măn'găn-). [Cf. G. mangan manganese.] Combining form for manganese.

man'ga-nate (măn'gȧ-nāt), n. Chem. A salt of manganic acid. Various manganates are obtained as green masses by fusion of manganese dioxide with alkalies, oxides, or carbonates. Those of sodium, potassium, and barium are perhaps the best-known.

man'ga-nese' (măn'gȧ-nēs'; măn'gȧ-nēz; 277), n. [F. manganèse, It. manganese, sasso magnesio; corrupt. fr. L. magnesia. See MAGNESIA.] 1. A black oxide of the metal described below (def. 2), esp. pyrolusite; — called specif. black manganese. Now Com. Also, Obs. or R., any of various ores of the metal; as, gray manganese; red manganese.

2. Chem. A hard, brittle metallic element having a grayish white color tinged with red and rusting like iron, but not magnetic. Symbol, Mn; at. wt., 54.93. Sp. gr., 8.0. Metallic manganese is not found in nature, except as an alloy in meteoric iron, but compounds of it are rather widely distributed, as the minerals pyrolusite, braunite hausmannite, manganite, psilomelane and wad, alabandite (a sulphide), rhodochrosite (carbonate), rhodonite (a silicate), etc., and are also found in natural waters, and in plants and animals. The metal was first isolated by Gahn in 1807; it is best prepared by igniting one of its oxides with aluminium. It has no commercial use except as a constituent of certain alloys. See SPIEGELEISEN, MANGANESE BRONZE. Chemically, manganese is of diverse character, forming the basic oxides MnO (manganous salts) and Mn_2O_3 (manganic salts), and the acidic oxides MnO_2 (manganites), MnO_3 (manganates), and Mn_2O_7 (permanganates). Mn_3O_4 is regarded as a salt, manganous manganite, rather than a true oxide. Compounds of manganese are used in the manufacture of glass, pigments, etc., in calico dyeing and printing, and as oxidizing agents, but most of the ore mined is used to make spiegeleisen and ferromanganese, and thus eventually to harden and toughen iron and steel.

manganese bronze. a Metal. Properly, bronze containing manganese, a common proportion being, copper 88, tin 10, manganese 2; also, any of certain other copper-manganese alloys not necessarily containing tin. In general, it is a reddish white metal, remarkable for its strength and toughness. b Dyeing. Manganese brown.

manganese brown. a A natural or artificial brown oxide of manganese, used as a pigment. b Dyeing. A brown color or dye produced upon the fabric by the decomposition of manganese salts.

manganese dioxide. Chem. A dark brown or iron-black substance, MnO_2, occurring native as pyrolusite, and prepared artificially by heating manganous nitrate, and, in less pure form, by various precipitation methods. For uses see PYROLUSITE, MANGANESE BROWN.

manganese heptoxide. Chem. A compound, Mn_2O_7, obtained as a dark green, oily, explosive liquid by action of concentrated sulphuric acid on permanganates.

manganese steel. Cast steel containing a considerable percentage of manganese. It is very hard and tough.

man-gan'ic (măn-găn'ĭk), a. Chem. Of, pert. to, resembling, or containing, manganese; specif., designating compounds in which manganese has a higher valence as contrasted with manganous compounds. — manganic acid, an acid, H_2MnO_4, not itself isolated, but known in the form of its salts, the manganates. — m. hydroxide. See MANGANOUS HYDROXIDE. — m. oxide, a compound, Mn_2O_3, occurring native as braunite, and obtained as a black powder by gentle heating of manganese oxides and hydroxides in air.

man'ga-nif'er-ous (măn'gȧ-nĭf'ẽr-ŭs), a. [manganese + -ferous.] Containing manganese.

man'ga-nin (măn'gȧ-nĭn), n. [See MANGANESE.] Metal. & Elec. An alloy of copper, manganese (8–12 per cent), and nickel (2–4 per cent). It has a low resistance temperature coefficient, and is much used in standard resistance coils.

man'ga-nite (-nīt), n. [manganese + -ite.] 1. Min. An ore of manganese, the hydrous oxide MnO(OH), in brilliant steel-gray or iron-black orthorhombic crystals, or massive. H., 4. Sp. gr., 4.2–4.4. Called also gray manganese ore.

2. Chem. Any of various salts derived from certain hydroxides of manganese related to the dioxide, and regarded as acids (manganous acids); as, potassium manganite.

man'ga-nize (-nīz), v. t.; -NIZED (-nīzd); -NIZ'ING (-nīz'ĭng). To alloy with manganese; as, manganized steel.

man'ga-no- (măn'gȧ-nō-). A combining form for manganese. Cf. MANGAN-; MANGANESE.

man'ga-no—man-gan'ic (-măn-găn'ĭk), a. Chem. Designating an oxide of manganese, Mn_3O_4, occurring native as hausmannite, and obtained as a reddish brown powder by strongly heating manganese oxides and hydroxides in air. It is regarded as a salt, rather than as a true oxide.

man'ga-no-stib'i-ite (măn'gȧ-nō-stĭb'ĭ-īt), n. Min. A basic manganese antimonate and arsenate found in black embedded grains. Hematostibiite is similar, but shows a blood-red color in thin splinters and contains no arsenic.

man'ga-nous (măn'gȧ-nŭs), a. Chem. Of, pert. to, or designating, those compounds of manganese in which the element has a lower valence as contrasted with manganic compounds; as, manganous oxide, MnO. — manganous acid, See MANGANITE. — m. hydroxide, a compound, $Mn(OH)_2$, obtained as a white precipitate by adding caustic alkali to a solution of a manganous salt. It rapidly oxidizes in contact with air, forming brown manganic hydroxide $Mn(OH)_3$. — m. oxide, a compound, MnO, obtained as a green, easily oxidizable powder by heating other oxides of manganese in a current of hydrogen. — m. sulphide, a compound, MnS, occurring native as alabandite, and obtained artificially as an easily oxidizable, flesh-colored precipitate.

Mang-bat'tu (măng-bät'to͞o), n. A Negro of a once powerful tribe dwelling about the headwaters of the Welle. Despite their developed political organization and skill in various crafts, during their period of power they were among the worst cannibals of Africa.

mange (mānj), n. [From F. manger to eat, OF. mangier; cf. OF. manjue voracity, food, itching, fr. mangier (3d sing. pres. manjue); or perh. fr. mangy. See MANGER, MANGY.] Any of various forms of more or less severe, persistent, and contagious skin disease affecting domestic animals and sometimes man, esp. those caused by minute parasitic mites of Sarcoptes, Psoroptes, Chorioptes, or allied genera which burrow in, or live on, the skin, and Demodex, which lives in the hair follicles or sebaceous glands. Mange of sheep is commonly called scab.

man'gel–wur'zel (măng'gl-wûr'zl), n. [G., corrupt. fr. mangoldwurzel; mangold beet + wurzel root.] a A large coarse variety of beet (Beta vulgaris macrorhiza) extensively grown, esp. in Europe, as food for cattle. b The fleshy so-called root of this plant, consisting of enlarged hypocotyl and root. It is less rich in sugar contents than the common, or sugar, beet.

rĭn; -rēn; 184). n. Also -rin. Chem. A crystalline alkaloid resembling atropine, found in Mandragora officinarum.

mandresa. † MADRASAH.

man'dri-arch (măn'drĭ-ärk), n. [LGr. μανδριάρχης; Gr. μάνδρα a fold, a monastery + ἄρχειν to rule.] A ruler or founder of an order of monks.

man'dril. Var. of MANDREL.

man-du'cus (măn-dū'kŭs), n. [L.] Rom. Antiq. A grotesque mask, representing a person chewing.

man'dy-as (măn'dĭ-ăs), n. [NGr. μανδύας, in Gr., cloak.] East. Ch. A long outer garment resembling a cope, worn by monks and bishops.

mane. † MAIN; MAINE, n.; MAN; MAUN, v., must; MOAN.

ma'ne (mā'nē), adv. [L.] Pharm. In the morning.

mane, a. [From the second part of Charlemagne, OF. maigne, L. magnus.] Great; — in Charlis the Mane, Charlemagne. Obs. Scot. [EATER.]

man-eating shark. See MAN-EATER.

Ma'ne-bach twin (mā'nē-băk) Cryst. A monoclinic twin crystal having the basal pinacoid as the twinning plane; — so named from the occurrence of such twins of orthoclase at Manebach in Germany.

man'eh (măn'ĕ). Hebrew form of MINA, a weight.

maneir. † MANNER.

manekin. † MANAKIN.

ma-nel'lo. † MANILLA, a ring.

manent, n. O. Eng. Law. A hide of land.

‖ ma'net (mā'nĕt). [L., 3d pers. sing., pres. ind.] (He or she) remains; — in stage directions.

‖ ma'net al'ta men'te re-po'stum (rē-pō'stŭm). [L.] It (Juno's wrath) remains laid away or buried deeply in the mind. Vergil (Æneid, I 26).

Ma-net'ti-a (mȧ-nĕt'ĭ-ȧ), n. [NL.] Bot Syn. of LYGISTUM. b [l.c.] Hort. The manettia vine.

man'ful-ly, adv. of MANFUL.

man'ful-ness, n. See -NESS.

man fungus. The earthstar.

mang (măng). Var. of MONG. Obs. or Dial. Eng.

mang. Scot. & dial. Eng form of AMANGE, prep., among.

mang, v. t. & i. To lead or go astray; to be, or cause to be, bewildered; to become frantic, as with anxiety. Obs. or Scot.

‖ man'ga (măn'gȧ; măn'gȧ), n. [Sp., fr. L. manica sleeve.] 1 A sort of cloth poncho, formerly much worn in Mexico.

2. Eccl. A case of silk used to cover a processional or other cross when not in use.

man'ga-bey (măn'gȧ-bā; -bĭ), man'ga-by (-bĭ), n. [So called by Buffon fr. Mangaby, in Madagascar, where ne erroneously supposed them to be native.] Any monkey of the genus Cercocebus (which see).

man'ga-cha-puy', man'ga-chapoi' (măn'gȧ-chä-pwē', -poi'), n. [Sp. mangachapuy, Tag. mangachapoi.] A dipterocarpaceous tree (Shorea mangachapoi) of the Philippine Islands; also, its hard red or white wood.

man-gal' (măn-gäl'), n. [Turk. mangal.] In Turkey, a brazier man'ga-lin. † MANGELIN.

man'gan-ap'a-tite (măn'gȧn-ăp'ȧ-tīt), n. [mangan- + apatite.] Min. A dark bluish green variety of apatite containing manganese.

man'gan-blende', n. [mangan- + blende.] Min. Alabandite.

man'gan-bru'cite, n. [mangan- + brucite.] Min. A manganiferous variety of brucite.

manganese black. A pigment consisting of native oxide of manganese. It is little used.

manganese green. Cassel green (barium manganate).

manganese peroxide. Chem. Manganese dioxide.

manganese spar. a Rhodonite. b Some varieties of rhodochrosite.

man'ga-ne'sian (mă'n'gȧ-nē'zhăn; -zĭ-ăn), a. Pert. to, containing, or consisting of, manganese. [Manganic. Obs.]

man'gan-hed'en-berg'ite, n. [mangan- + hedenbergite.] Min. A variety of hedenbergite containing manganese.

man'ga-ni'um (măn-gā'nĭ-ŭm), n. [NL.] Manganese.

man'ga-no-ca'lcite (măn'gȧ-nō-kăl'sīt), n. Min. A variety of rhodochrosite containing calcium carbonate man'ga-no-co-lum'bite (-kō-lŭm'bīt), n. Min A manganiferous variety of columbite man'ga-no-phyl'lite (-fĭl'īt), n. Min. A manganiferous biotite.

man'ga-no-sid'er-ite (-sĭd'ẽr-īt), n. Min A variety of rhodochrosite containing a considerable amount of siderite man'ga-no-site' (mă'n'gȧ-nō-sīt'; măn-găn'ō-sīt), n. [See MANGANOUS.] Min Native manganous oxide, MnO, occurring in small emerald-green octahedrons, which turn black on exposure. H., 5–6. Sp. gr., 5.18.

man'ga-no-tan'ta-lite (măn'gȧ-nō-tăn'tȧ-līt), n. Min. A manganiferous variety of tantalite.

man'gan-pec'to-lite, n. [mangan- + pectolite.] Min. A manganiferous variety of pectolite.

Man'gar (mŭn'gẽr), n. A Nepalese tribe which furnishes many soldiers to the Gurkha regiments of the British Indian army; also, their language (see INDO-CHINESE).

Man'ga-yan' (mŭ'n'gä-y ä n''), Var. of MANGUIAN.

mang'corn. Var of MUNGCORN.

mange, v. t. [OF. mangier, F. manger.] To eat. Obs = n. A meal; a kind of fodder. Obs.

mange mite (mānj). Any of the small parasitic mites that infest the skin of cattle, horses, dogs, and other animals, causing mange.

man'ger (mān'jĕr), n. [F. mangeoire, fr. manger to eat, fr. L. manducare, fr. mandere to chew. Cf. MANDIBLE, MANDUCATE.] 1. A trough or open box in which fodder is placed for horses or cattle to eat.

2. Shipbuilding. The extreme forward part of the deck, having a bulkhead or plank (the manger board) athwartships high enough to turn back the water which enters the hawse holes and drains off through near-by scuppers called manger scuppers.

Mange Mite of Cattle. Much enlarged.

3. [cap.] Astron. The cluster Præsepe.

Man-gif'er-a (măn-jĭf'ĕr-ȧ), n. [NL. See MANGO; -FEROUS.] Bot. A rather large genus of tropical Asiatic anacardiaceous trees, characterized by the coriaceous, entire leaves, small paniculate flowers, and a fleshy drupaceous fruit with a fibrous mesocarp. M. indica is the mango.

man'gle (măn'g'l), v. t.; MAN'GLED (-g'ld); MAN'GLING (măn'g'lĭng). [AF. mahangler; cf. LL. mangulare; perh. fr. the source of E. maim.] 1. To cut, bruise, or hack with repeated blows or strokes, making a ragged or torn wound, or covering with wounds; to tear in cutting; to cut in a bungling manner; to lacerate; to mutilate.

Mangled with ghastly wounds through plate and mail Milton.

2. To spoil, mutilate, or injure, in making, doing, or performing; as, to mangle a piece of music or a recitation.

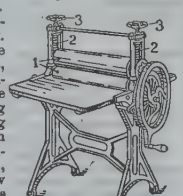
To mangle a play or a novel. Swift man'gle, n. [D. mangel; cf. LL. manganum an instrument for throwing stones, Gr. μάγγανον a machine for defending fortifications, axis of a pulley. Cf. MANGONEL.] 1. A machine for smoothing cloth, as sheets, tablecloths, clothing, etc., by roller pressure. Orig., a simple household apparatus consisting essentially of a reciprocating weighted box or table moving on rollers beneath which, on a polished table, the clothes, etc., were placed to be pressed; now a machine having two rollers in contact, often heated, between which the articles are passed.



Mangle, 1. 1 Hardwood Rolls; 2, 2 Coil Springs; 3, 3 Pressure Screws.

2. Stereotypy. A cylinder machine for molding specially prepared dry flong on the form.

man'gle (măn'g'l), v. t. [Cf. D. mangelen. See MANGLE, n.] 1. To press or smooth with a mangle, as damp linen or cloth.

2. To smooth out (sheet lead) by beating it with a plumber's mallet while wrapped round a wooden mandrel.

man'gle, n. [Sp. mangle mangrove.] The mangrove; hence, any tree or shrub having a habit like the mangrove, as Avicennia nitida, Laguncularia racemosa, etc.

Mangle Racks. 1 With Lever Guide for reciprocating the table in one kind of printing machine. 2 With Slot Guide.

man'gler (măn'glĕr), n. One that mangles, or mutilates; specif., a machine for chopping or mincing meat, etc.

man'gler, n. One that smooths or presses with a mangle.

mangle rack. Mach. An adaptation of the mangle wheel in which the crescent-shaped formation of the pins or teeth is changed into a straight rack. The teeth may be external (as in the Illust.) instead of internal.

mangle wheel. Mach. A device for converting continuous circular motion into reciprocating motion (circular or linear), in which a small pinion guided by a slot, a system of levers, or the like, gears with a crescent-shaped row of pins protruding from the face of a wheel, first on the inside and then, without necessarily stopping, on the outside, or with a continuous series of teeth forming part of an external and part of an internal gear wheel joined by a curved row of teeth at each end so as to form a shallow, serrated, crescent-shaped recess in the face of a disk. It was invented for use in the old-fashioned clothes mangle with a reciprocating weighted table, and has been employed in various other machines.

1, 2 Mangle Wheels.

man'go (măn'gō), n.; pl. -GOES (-gōz). [Pg. manga, fr. Tamil mānkāy.] 1. a A well-known tropical fruit, of which there are many varieties in cultivation throughout the East and West Indies. It is of oblong shape, yellow or yellowish green in color, with a thick rind often having a pronounced flavor of turpentine, a fibrous, agreeably subacid, juicy pulp, and a hard central stone. b The tree (Mangifera indica) which bears this fruit. See MANGIFERA. c The tree Irvingia barteri, which yields dika bread; the bread tree b.

Mango, 1. a Flowering Branch ($\frac{1}{6}$); b Fruit in section, showing solitary Seed ($\frac{1}{12}$)

2. A pickled green muskmelon, cucumber, peach, bell pepper, etc., stuffed with horse-radish or chowchow.

mango bird. a An oriole (Oriolus kundoo), native of India. b A humming bird of the genus Lampornis.

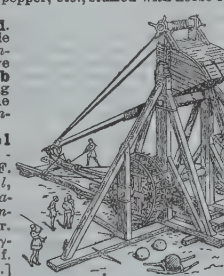
man'go-nel (măn'gō-nĕl), n. [OF. mangonel, LL. manganellus, manganum, fr. Gr. μάγγανον. Cf. MANGLE, n.] A military engine formerly used for throwing stones, javelins, etc.



Mangonel.

man'go-steen (măn'gō-stēn), n. [Malay mangustan, mangis.] 1. a A well-known East Indian tropical fruit. It is dark reddish brown in color, with a thick rind inclosing a number of carpels like those of an orange; the juicy flesh has a flavor described as suggesting both the peach and pineapple. b The clusiaceous tree (Garcinia mangostana) bearing this fruit. It has large coriaceous leaves and deep red tetramerous flowers.

Mangosteen. Section of Fruit. ($\frac{1}{4}$)

2. Pharm. The pericarp of this fruit. It is used as an astringent.

man'grove (măn'grōv), n. [Malay manggimanggi + E. grove.] 1. Any tree or shrub of the genus Rhizophora, esp. R. mangle. They are natives of tropical shores, and have evergreen coriaceous leaves and yellowish flowers. The fruit germinates while still on the tree, the hypocotyl growing to a considerable length before detachment. The plant also emits numerous aërial prop roots, which ultimately form an impenetrable mass, so that the mangrove is continually advancing the shore line in regions which it inhabits. The wood is used chiefly for posts, fuel, etc. The astringent bark is employed in medicine and in tanning.

Mangrove. Young Fruits germinating.

2. Any of various other plants resembling Rhizophora in habit; — usually with descriptive qualification, as black mangrove, white mangrove, etc.; specif., a tree of the genus Avicennia. See BLACK MANGROVE.

Man-guian', or Man-gyan' (măn-gyän'), n.; pl. -GUIANES or -GYANES (-gyä'nās), or -GYANS (-gyänz'). [From a native word mangyan infidel.] A member of any of the pagan tribes of the islands of Mindoro, Romblón, and Tablas, of the Philippine group. Negritos, Malays, and native races with Chinese or Caucasian admixture have all been called by this name.

man'gy (mān'jĭ), a.; MAN'GI-ER (-jĭ-ĕr); MAN'GI-EST. [From MANGE; or perh. fr. F. mangé, p. p. of manger to eat. See MANGER.] 1. Infected with, of the nature of, or caused by, the mange; also, Obs., scabby.

2. Shabby; seedy; squalid.

3. Mean; contemptible. Colloq.

man-han'dle (măn-hăn'd'l), v. t.; -HAN'DLED (-d'ld); -HAN'DLING (-hăn'dlĭng). 1. To move, or manage, by human force without mechanical aid; as, to manhandle a cannon.

2. To handle roughly; as, the captive was manhandled.

man'-hat'er (măn'hāt'ĕr), n. One who hates mankind; a misanthrope; also, one who hates a man as a male.

Man-hat'tan cock'tail. A cocktail made of vermuth, whisky, a dash of bitters, and, usually, a little sweetening.

Man'hès' proc'ess (mă'nĕs'). [After Pierre Manhès, French metallurgist, who perfected it.] Metal. The Bessemer process of desulphurizing copper matte.

man'hole' (măn'hōl'), n. 1. a A hole through which a man may go into, or gain access to, a drain, sewer, electric conduit, steam boiler, parts of machinery, etc., as for cleaning. b A hole or recess into which a person may go, as for refuge in a railroad tunnel. c A hole in a covered boat or canoe in which the rower or paddler sits.

2. A hatch in a vessel, smaller than a scuttle.

3. Mining. A small passage connecting a level with a stope, or with the level next above.

man'hood (-hŏŏd), n. [man + -hood.] 1. State of being man (i. e. a human being), or a man as distinguished from a child or a woman.

Lost manhood and put monkhood on. D. G. Rossetti.

2. Manly quality; courage; bravery; resolution.

I am ashamed
That thou hast power to shake my manhood thus Shak.

3. Humaneness; humanity. Obs.

4. Men collectively; the adult males, as of a country, district, or nation.

manhood suffrage. Suffrage of all male citizens not under a civil disability, as for crime, lunacy, etc.

ma'ni-a (mā'nĭ-ȧ), n. [L. mania, Gr. μανία, akin to μαίνεσθαι to rage; cf. ME. manie, F. manie. Cf. MIND, n.] 1. Violent derangement of mind; madness; insanity; specif., a form of insanity marked by great nervous excitement, hallucinations, delusions, and violent tendencies

2. Excessive or unreasonable excitement or enthusiasm; a violent desire or passion; a craze; as, the tulip mania.

Syn. — MANIA, DELIRIUM, FRENZY are here compared in their nontechnical uses; for technical senses, see defs. MANIA suggests a relatively permanent, DELIRIUM a more temporary, state of uncontrollable emotion, excitement, or enthusiasm; as, "You may conceive the difference in kind between the fancy and the imagination in this way, that if the check of the senses and the reason were withdrawn, the first would become delirium, and the last mania" (Coleridge); "His anger is not a brief madness, but a permanent mania" (Thackeray); "the delirium of popular enthusiasm" (Lecky); "the delirium of love" (Mrs. Humphry Ward). Mania is often synonymous with "craze," "rage," "passion"; delirium sometimes suggests an incoherent or meaningless jumble; as, the tulip mania in Holland, Anglomania; "this dull delirium of a world" (Hawthorne). FRENZY suggests wilder or more violent agitation or disorder than delirium; as, "Paris wholly has got to the acme of its frenzy; whirled, all ways, by panic madness" (Carlyle); "The unhappy gentleman spun round and round the apartment in a transport of frenzy" (Dickens). See INSANE, ECSTASY.

ma'ni-ac (mā'nĭ-ăk), a. [Cf. F. maniaque. See MANIA.] 1. Raving with madness; raging with disordered intellect; affected with mania; mad.

2. Of, pertaining to, or characterized by, mania; pertaining to, or characteristic of, a maniac; frantic; violent.

Manna is used medicinally as a gentle laxative, demulcent, and expectorant. b A similar product obtained from various other plants, but differing in containing other substances than mannite as the chief ingredient, and hence often called false manna.

6. Short for MANNA LICHEN, MANNA GRASS.

manna ash. The flowering ash (Fraxinus ornus); also, any of several related European ashes yielding manna.

man'na croup (krōōp). [manna + Russ. & Pol. krupa groats, grits.] 1. The portions of hard wheat kernels not ground by the millstones or that do not go through the bolter; a kind of semolina prepared in Russia and used for puddings, soups, etc.; — called also manna groats.

2. The husked grains of manna grass.

manna grass. Any grass of the genus Panicularia.

manna gum. a An Australian eucalypt (Eucalyptus viminalis), which yields a kind of false manna. b = LERP.

manna insect. A scale insect (Gossyparia mannifera), causing production of manna on the tamarisk in Arabia.

manna lichen. Any of several Old World lichens of the genus Lecanora, fragments of which are often blown about in large quantities over the Arabian and African deserts, being sometimes used as food. Some commentators ascribe the manna of Scripture to this lichen. See MANNA.

man'ner (măn'ẽr), n. [ME. manere, F. manière, fr. (assumed) LL. manarius, for L. manuarius belonging to the hand, fr. manus the hand; cf. OF. manier manual, skillful. See MANUAL.] 1. Species; kind; sort; also (a use of the sing. in pl. sense), kinds; sorts; as, what manner of person; all manner of goods; no manner of question; — formerly commonly with ellipsis of of; as, many manner ways; a manner man. Manner, in this sense, was also frequent in the phrases manner of (or manner) way, wise, fashion, kind, etc.; cf. def. 2.

A manner Latin corrupt was her speech. Chaucer.

2. Fashion; guise; aspect; nature; character; as, he appeared in the manner of a warrior; they described the manner of the country. Archaic.

3. a Way of acting; a mode of procedure; the mode or method in which something is done or in which anything happens; way; mode; as, to speak in an earnest manner; to follow the manner of right reasoning; they responded in like manner; in a manner of speaking. Hence the phrase in a manner (formerly also in manner), in a manner of speaking, so to speak, as it were.

The bread is in a manner common. 1 Sam. xxi. 5.

4. a characteristic or customary way of acting; natural or normal behavior; habit; usage; custom; as, to act after the manner of one's kind.

Paul, as his manner was, went in unto them. Acts xvii. 2.

5. Hence: Mode of living or acting; behavior; conduct; specif.: a pl. With reference to social life or morality: Morals as shown in conduct; social conduct or rules of conduct as shown in the prevalent customs; as, the manners of nomads; the novel is a study of manners. b pl. (Also, Obs., in sing.) With reference to politeness or propriety: Habitual conduct or deportment; behavior; as, good or bad manners; also, good or polite deportment; as, to learn or have manners; to do, or make, one's manners, that is, to perform the appropriate acts of courtesy.

c With reference to bearing: Deportment; carriage; aspect; mien; as, a gentle or a superior manners; to carry one's self in the grand manner.

Air and manner are more expressive than words. Richardson.

d Of a horse: Action; carriage.

6. Criticism. a Method of execution or mode of presentation, esp. as distinguished from the matter presented; style; as, the difference between history and fiction is often more in the matter than the manner; a statue in the archaistic manner; the earlier manner of Turner. b Mannerism; obtrusive manner. c Character; ethos. See ETHOS, 2; — only in pl. Obs.

7. Reason; cause; also, condition or stipulation. Obs.

8. Moderation; due measure. Obs.

Syn. — MANNER, WAY, FASHION, TRICK. MANNER, as here compared, (see DEPORTMENT), is mode of action, or distinctive style; WAY is often more general than manner, but it may also designate a peculiar, personal, or intimate mode of behavior or procedure; FASHION, as here compared (see FASHION), occurs chiefly in phrases introduced by after or in; as, "God who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in time past" (Heb. i. 1); "Mark the manner of his teaching" (Shak.); "Milton's manner is very grand" (Lowell); "God fulfills himself in many ways" (Tennyson); "all her little womanly ways" (Hawthorne); it's only his way; "He will, after his sort, fashion well you" (Shak.); "fire-hollowing this in Indian fashion" (Tennyson); to swim dog fashion. A TRICK, as here compared (see ARTIFICE), is an individual trait or mannerism; as, "Here was a poetry which boldly assumed the dress, the words, the habits, the very trick of contemporary life" (W. Pater); "The trick of personifying words is a fatal source of mischief in theology" (M. Arnold). See METHOD, HABIT, AFFECTATION, TURN.

by any manner of means, in any way possible; by any sort of means. — by no m. of means, in no way whatever; in no possible way; not at all. See by no means, under MEAN, n. — to the m. born, born to follow or obey a certain practice or custom; also, having lifelong acquaintance with given conditions, customs, etc.; apparently naturally fitted for some occupation, work, or position. The phrase as used by Shakespeare in "Hamlet" (I. iv. 15) has by some been wrongly understood to refer to a manor, of which manner is an old variant spelling, and hence the phrase to the manor born is sometimes used in this sense, accustomed to the usages of a locality, or of high or polite society.

He has not the eyes and the nerves of one to the manner born. Swinburne.

The water lily's ancestors have been to the manner born for millions of years. Grant Allen.

man'nered (măn'ẽrd), a. 1. Having (such) manners; — often in composition; as, well-mannered.

Give her princely training, that she may be Mannered as she is born. Shak.

2. Dealing with, or exhibiting, manners, or modes of life, etc., as a play or other literary piece. Obs.

3. Having good manners; well-behaved. Obs.

4. Affected with mannerism or excessive peculiarity.

man'ner-ing, n. Training in manners, or (of a horse) in carriage or action. G. M. Rommel.

man'ner-ism (măn'ẽr-ĭ-zm), n. [Cf. F. maniérisme.] Excessive adherence to a peculiar style or manner; a characteristic mode of action, bearing, or treatment, carried to excess, especially in literature or art.

Mannerism is pardonable, and is sometimes even agreeable, when the manner, though vicious, is natural. . . . But a mannerism which does not sit easy on the mannerist, which has been adopted on principle, and which can be sustained only by constant effort, is always offensive. Macaulay.

Syn. — See AFFECTATION.

man'ner-ist (măn'ẽr-ĭst), n. [Cf. F. maniériste.] In art, one who produces works of art supposed to show a strong tendency to imitation, to obedience to the rules of a school, or to a peculiar and formal or too unchanging method of his own; specif., in the history of Italian painting, any of those painters of the 16th and 17th centuries who imitated and exaggerated the styles of their great predecessors, chiefly Raphael, Michelangelo, and Correggio.

man'ner-ly, a. 1. Decorous; seemly; moral. Obs.

2. Showing good manners; civil; respectful; polite.

What thou thinkest meet, and is most mannerly. Shak.

2. With good manners; politely.

1. Bot. Bearing or exuding manna.

2. Zoöl. Causing production of manna, as certain insects.

man'ning (măn'ĭng), p. pr. & vb. n. of MAN; specif.: a Supplying of a ship, etc., with men; also, a crew. b Accustoming of hawks or other birds or animals to men; taming of hawks. c A man's work for a day. Rare. Cent. Dict.

manning parade, Mil., in the United States coast artillery, a parade ground on which batteries are formed and then divided into their component gun detachments, which are marched to man their respective pieces.

man'nish (măn'ĭsh), a. [man + 1st -ish: cf. AS. mennisc, menisc.] 1. Of, belonging to, befitting, or characteristic of, mankind; human. Obs. Gower.

2. Resembling, suitable to, or characteristic of, a man, as distinguished from a woman or from a child; manlike; masculine. "A woman impudent and mannish grown." Shak.

Syn. — See MALE.

man'nite (măn'īt), n. [manna + -ite.] Chem. A white crystalline substance, $C_6H_8(OH)_6$, belonging to the class of alcohols called hexites, and occurring in three optically different modifications; — called also mannitol. Ordinary mannite, which (though levorotatory) is called d-mannite to indicate its close relation to d-mannose, is the principal constituent of the manna of the manna ash, and is found also in many other plants, as celery, sugar cane, seaweeds of the genus Laminaria, etc. It is sweet, and hence is called manna sugar, though it is not a sugar in the proper sense. Mannite yields an anhydride mannitan ($C_6H_{12}O_5$), and also isomeric anhydrides called mannides, having the formula $C_6H_{10}O_4$.

man-nit'ic (mă-nĭt'ĭk), a. Of, pert. to, resembling, or derived from, mannite. — mannitic fermentation, a kind of viscous fermentation in which mannite is produced.

man'ni-tose (măn'ĭ-tōs), n. [mannite + -ose.] Chem. A sugar (now known to be dextro fructose), obtained by careful oxidation of mannite.

Mann'lich-er pis'tol (măn'lĭk-ẽr). [After Ferdinand Mannlicher (1848–1904), Austrian inventor.] A self-loading pistol with a fixed magazine of box type in the stock, holding five cartridges. In action the friction of the projectile carries the barrel forward against the force of a spiral spring; which, when the trigger is released, returns the barrel to position over a fresh cartridge, ready for firing.

Mannlicher rifle. A breech-loading repeater, carrying five cartridges and not fitted for use as a single-loader. The breech bolt is operated by a straight forward and back motion, without rotation. The rifle has been much used by Germany and Austria.

man'no- (măn'ō-). Chem. Combining form for mannite, mannose, etc.

man'no-hep'tite (măn'ō-hĕp'tīt), n. [manno- + heptite.] Org. Chem. A heptahydric alcohol, $C_7H_9(OH)_7$, known in three optically different modifications, of which the dextro variety is found in nature as perseite (which see).

man-non'ic (mă-nŏn'ĭk), a. [G. *mannon*säure. See MANNOSE.] Org. Chem. Pertaining to or designating a sirupy acid, $C_5H_6(OH)_5CO_2H$, formed by oxidizing mannose and, like it, existing in three varieties.

man'nose (măn'ōs), n. [mannite + -ose.] Org. Chem. A sugar ($C_6H_{12}O_6$) of the group known as aldohexoses, obtained by careful oxidation of mannite and, like it, existing in three different varieties. Dextro-mannose, called also seminose, is further obtained by the hydrolysis of certain natural carbohydrates, as the reserve cellulose of seeds.

Ma-no'bo (mä-nō'bō), n.; pl. -BOS (-bōs). A Malay or Malayo-Indonesian of a group of tribes, mostly heathen, of Mindanao, especially numerous in the Agusan River valley; also, their language. See MALAYO-POLYNESIAN.

man'-of-war', n.; pl. MEN-OF-WAR. 1. A war vessel of a recognized navy, esp. one armed for active hostilities.

2. A man-of-war's man. Rare.

man-of-war bird. a A frigate bird. b Incorrectly, a skua gull or an albatross.

man-of-war fish. A small stromateoid fish (Gobiomorus gronovii) common in the Gulf of Mexico and the Gulf Stream, where it hides among the tentacles of the Portuguese man-of-war.

man-of-war's man. A sailor serving on a war vessel.

man'o-graph (măn'ō-grăf), n. [Gr. μανός thin, rare + -graph: cf. F. manographe.] Engin. An optical device for making an indicator diagram for high-speed engines. It consists of a light-tight box or camera having at one end a small convex mirror which reflects a beam of light on to the ground glass or photographic plate at the other end. The mirror is pivoted so that it can be moved in one direction by a small plunger operated by an elastic metal diaphragm which closes a tube connected with the engine cylinder. It is also moved at right angles to this direction by a reducing motion, called a reproducer, so as to copy accurately on a smaller scale the motion of the engine piston. The resultant of these two movements imparts to the reflected beam of light a motion similar to that of the pencil of the ordinary indicator, and this can be traced on the sheet of ground glass, or photographed. See INDICATOR, n., 3.

ma-nom'e-ter (mă-nŏm'ĕ-tẽr), n. [Gr. μανός thin, rare + -meter: cf. F. manomètre.] An instrument for measuring the tension or tenuity of gases and vapors; a pressure gauge or vacuum gauge. In the simplest forms the pressure of the gas or vapor is balanced against a column of mercury in a U-tube. In many cases an instrument is used in which the pressure is balanced against the elastic force of a spring, an elastic diaphragm, a closed curved elastic tube, or the like, as in the aneroid barometer and the Bourdon gauge (which see).

man'o-met'ri-cal (-rĭ-kăl) } [Cf. F. manométrique.] Of or pert. to the manometer or the measurement of gaseous pressure; made by the manometer. — man'o-met'ri-cal-ly, adv.

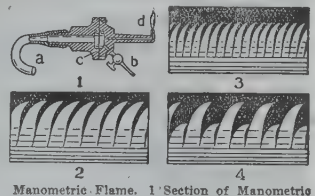
manometric flame, Acous., a gas flame so arranged as to be made to pulsate by the action of sound waves. The apparatus consists of a small metal box (manometric capsule) divided by a rubber membrane (c in Illust.) into two compartments, one of which connects by a tube (a) with the source of the sound, while through the other the gas is conducted (b) to the jet (d). The pulsations of the flame may be rendered distinct to the eye by means of a revolving mirror or by photography.



Manometric Flame. 1 Section of Manometric Capsule; 2–4 Flame Images: 2 of a Fundamental Tone; 3 of its Octave; 4 of the Fundamental and Octave combined.

Ma'non' Les'caut' (mä'nôN' lĕs'kō'). The heroine of a noted romance, generally regarded as the first French novel, by the Abbé Prévost (1697–1763). Manon is repeatedly faithless to her lover, the Chevalier des Grieux, merely from her love of the comfort and luxury he is often unable to supply. She is arrested and transported to America, the Chevalier accompanying her, and eventually dies of exhaustion in the desert.

man'or (măn'ẽr), n. [ME. maner, OF. maneir habitation, village, F. manoir manor, prop. the OF. inf. maneir to stay, remain, dwell, L. manere. See MANSION; cf. REMAIN.]

1. The house or hall of an estate; a mansion. Obs.

2. O. Eng. Hist. A house against which geld (probably originally Danegeld) was charged; hence, the land represented in the house, or any aggregate of land treated as a unit for that purpose.

Such then is the best explanation that we can offer of the manerium [manor] of Domesday Book. About details we may be wrong, but that this term has a technical meaning which is connected with the levy of the danegeld we cannot doubt. It loses that meaning in the course of time because the danegeld gives way before newer forms of taxation. It never again acquires a technical meaning until the late days when retrospective lawyers find the essence of a manor in its court. F. W. Maitland.

We seem . . . to arrive at something analogous to Professor Maitland's technical definition of the manor as the fiscal unit from which gafol is paid direct to the king, while its lord is the receiver of the payments and services of its tenants. F. Seebohm.

3. Vaguely, in the 13th century and for some time after that, an estate (of no fixed size or description) administered as a unit, esp. a demesne estate of a lord for which a court-baron was held; later, with the law writers from the 17th century down, the holding of a lord having at least the number (variously stated as two or three) of freehold tenants required to entitle it to hold a court-baron; hence, sometimes, the incorporeal right to hold and receive the perquisites of a court-baron.

Thus we may regard the typical manor [of the 13th century] (1) as being a unit in public law, or police and feudal law, (2) as being an unit in the system of agriculture, (3) as being an unit in the management of property, (4) as being a jurisdictional unit. But we have now to see that hardly one of these traits can be considered as absolutely essential. Pollock & Mait.

4. Amer. Law. A tract of land occupied by tenants who pay a fee-farm rent to the proprietor; specif., in New York, a tract of land granted by the King of Great Britain in colonial days either by patent or in confirmation of grants from the States-General of Holland to proprietors, generally called patroons, who held by perpetual rent in money or in kind. These patroons were tenants in capite and had such manorial privileges as the right to hold a manorial court, to award fines, and to have waifs, estrays, and deodands. They had the right of subinfeudation, but their tenants did not. After the Revolution the State superseded the king as lord, and the rents from the proprietors were from time to time commuted or released. In a few cases the rents, in money, in services, or in kind, from the subtenants, still exist as rent charges upon the land.

The maritime laws of modern nations are chiefly based on the laws embodied in such compilations as the Rhodian Laws, the Consolato del Mare, the Laws of Oleron, Laws of Wisby, etc., which were based on the usages and customs of the Mediterranean seacoast states and cities. In England maritime law is administered by the admiralty courts, in the United States by the Federal courts, often called admiralty courts when so acting. The State courts have concurrent jurisdiction whenever the State law affords a remedy. See ADMIRALTY, 3.
Each State adopts the maritime law, not as a code having any independent or inherent force proprio vigore, but as its own law, with such modifications and qualifications as it sees fit.

mar'riage (mär'ĭj), n. [ME. mariage, F. mariage, fr. mari husband, L. maritus. See MARRY, v. t.] 1. State of being married, or united to a person or persons of the opposite sex as husband or wife; also, the mutual relation of husband and wife; wedlock; abstractly, the institution whereby men and women are joined in a special kind of social and legal dependence, esp. as constituting the simplest form of family. Marriage is of two general types, monogamous and polygamous (polygamy itself being either polyandrous or polygynous). Monogamous marriage is the form most widely practiced and the only form generally recognized in countries affected by Christian civilization. A primitive communal, or group, marriage has been regarded as the earliest form, but it is not known to exist at the present day (cf. PUNALUAN). Among most civilized peoples marriage has been a religious rite or sacrament, though a nonreligious ritual for marriages is now generally provided for; among many savage and barbarous folks marriage by purchase or by capture of the wife is or has been customary (cf. FAMILY, MATRIARCHY, PATRIARCHY). Marriage effects a change of legal status, and cannot be terminated at the will of the parties under modern civilized legal systems. Legally husband and wife are, at the common law, for many purposes considered as one, the property rights, in particular, of the wife being mostly, temporarily or permanently, merged in those of the husband; but this has been radically changed by statute both in British and United States law, so that the wife has practically equal rights with the husband. Other legal systems vary as to this matter, some being more liberal than others. Cf. DOWER, CURTESY, PARAPHERNALIA, MANUS, POTESTAS, COMMUNITY, GANANCIAL SYSTEM, DIVORCE, FORBIDDEN DEGREES, etc.

2. Act of marrying, or rite by which the married status is effected; wedding; often, the wedding ceremony and attendant festivities or formalities. Cf. CONFARREATION; COEMPTION, 2; BA'AL MARRIAGE; BEENA MARRIAGE; LEVIRATE.

The kingdom of heaven is like unto a certain king which made a marriage for his son. Matt. xxii. 2.

3. The marriage vow or contract. Obs. Chaucer.

4. Any intimate or close union.

Syn.—MARRIAGE, MATRIMONY, WEDLOCK, WEDDING. Marriage and matrimony may alike refer to the relation between married persons or to the state into which they enter; as, "There was a marriage in Cana of Galilee" (John ii. 1); "the form of solemnization of matrimony" (Bk. of Com. Prayer); "Marriage is honorable in all" (Heb. xiii. 4); "the holy estate of matrimony" (Bk. of Com. Prayer). MARRIAGE is the word in common use; MATRIMONY is somewhat formal or conventional, and occasionally has a half-humorous suggestion. Marriage (not matrimony) is also used of the act or ceremony. WEDLOCK is archaic, poetical, or legal for marriage or (esp.) matrimony; WEDDING denotes the nuptial ceremony or (esp.) festivities; as, "the holy state of wedlock" (Bp. Horsley); born in wedlock; "great store of wedding cheer" (Shak.); wedding ring, cake, presents. See MATRIMONIAL.

marriage of convenience, a marriage contracted primarily for the advantages arising out of it, such as keeping an estate in a family, the acquisition of wealth or social position, etc., rather than because of mutual affection. — m., or wedding, of the Adriatic, an ancient ceremony at Venice, said to have been instituted after the victory of the Venetians over the Imperial fleet in 1177, on the gift of a gold ring by Pope Alexander III. to the doge as a token of the city's dominion over the sea. It was celebrated annually on Ascension Day, the doge casting a consecrated ring into the sea from the bucentaur, or state barge, with the words, "Desponsamus te, mare, in signum veri perpetuique dominii" (We wed thee, O sea, in sign of a true and perpetual dominion), as a token that the sea was subject to Venice "as a bride is to her husband." The Venetians called the ceremony the "sposalizio del mare," i. e., "espousal of the sea."

Mars (märz), n. [L. Mars, gen. Martis, archaic Mavors, gen. Mavortis.] 1. Rom. Relig. The god of war, in which character he was also regarded as protector of the fields against hostile aliens and as leader of militant colonists. He was identified with the Greek Ares, and hence associated in cult with Venus. The chief festivals of Mars occurred in March (the month named for him) and included the Agonium Martiale, Equiria, and Tubilustrium; the October festivals, Armilustrium and Equus October, were also in his honor (cf. QUIRINUS), as was the lustrum (which see). In Rome the Campus Martius was the seat of the most ancient and famous altar of Mars. Cf. AMBARVALIA, BELLONA, DI, SALII.
2. Astron. One of the planets of the solar system, conspicuous for the redness of its light. Symbol, ♂. It is the fourth in order from the sun, or the next beyond the earth, having a diameter of about 4,200 miles, a period of 687 days, and a mean distance of 141,000,000 miles from the sun. The least distance of Mars from the earth is 35,000,000 miles, as in 1909 and 1924. It has two small satellites, Deimos and Phobos. The physical conditions on Mars bear some resemblance to those on the earth, but it is now considered that the dark regions are not oceans, but areas of vegetation. The atmosphere of Mars must be exceedingly rare — perhaps like that surrounding the summits of the Himalayas. The inclination of the planet's axis to the plane of its orbit indicates seasons similar to those of the earth. As the Martian spring approaches, a network of straight, threadlike markings, popularly called canals, begins to develop in the planet's surface. No astronomer regards them as filled with water; some think they are volcanic or other surface cracks, bordered by a straggling vegetation and so made visible; others regard the vegetation, periodically renewed, as evidencing extended irrigation, and, therefore, the presence of intelligent beings.
3. Alchemy. Iron.
4. Her. Gules, in blazoning by planets. Obs.

Mar-sa'la (mär-sä'lȧ), n. Also Mar-sal'la (-sȧl'lȧ). [It., fr. Marsala, in Sicily.] A strong wine of good bouquet and keeping quality, made in the vicinity of Marsala, Sicily. Its color, strength, and sweetness vary with the evaporated must and spirit with which it is treated.

Mars brown (märz). A yellowish brown pigment whose color is due to iron oxide.

Mars-de'ni-a (märz-dē'nĭ-ȧ), n. [NL., after W. Marsden, English author.] Bot. A genus of asclepiadaceous climbing shrubs containing numerous tropical species. They have small greenish purple flowers, the crown of the corolla composed of five flat scales united at base to the androecium. M. tenacissima yields jetee fiber and M. tinctoria a kind of indigo. The latex of some species is a violent poison.

mar-su'pi-al (mär-sū'pĭ-ăl), n. One of the Marsupialia.

Mar-su'pi-a'li-a (-ā'lĭ-ȧ), n. pl. [NL., fr. L. marsupium a pouch, bag, purse, Gr. μαρσύπιον, dim. of μάρσυπος, μάρσιπος.] Zoöl. An order comprising the lowest existing mammals except the monotremes. It contains the kangaroos, wombats, bandicoots, opossums, etc. With few exceptions, they develop no placenta, and have a pouch on the abdomen of the female containing the teats and serving to carry the young, which are born in a comparatively undeveloped condition. Among other more or less constant characters are the numerous teeth (often over 44), few or none of which are preceded by functional milk teeth, the double uterus and vagina, the location of the scrotum in front of the penis, and the small brain characteristic of relatively low types. The order, which comprises a great variety of forms, both herbivorous and carnivorous, varying much in structure and habits, is divided into the suborders Diprotodontia and Polyprotodontia. Marsupials (except the American opossums and the genus Cænolestes) are now found only in the Australian region, but were once widely distributed.

mar-su'pi-um (mär-sū'pĭ-ŭm), n.; pl. -PIA (-ȧ). [L., a pouch.] Anat. & Zoöl. a An abdominal pouch formed by a fold of the skin and inclosing the mammary glands of monotremes and most marsupials. b Any analogous structure in lower animals, as fishes, crustaceans, etc., for inclosing or carrying eggs or young. c The pecten of the eye of a bird or reptile.

Mar'sy-as (mär'sĭ-ăs), n. [L., fr. Gr. Μαρσύας.] Gr. Myth. Probably a Phrygian god of nature, resembling Pan. In Greek myth, Athena having cast away the flute because it distorted her face to play it, Marsyas took it up and challenged Apollo to a contest of flute with lyre. Apollo won only by adding his voice to the music of the strings. For his presumption, Apollo punished Marsyas by flaying him alive, the river Marsyas being formed from his blood.

The myth of Athena and Marsyas was dear to Athenian pride; it was to them the constant symbol of the select superiority of their own artistic instinct, and of their revolt against barbaric license. E. Harrison

mar'tial (mär'shăl), a. [L. martialis of or belonging to Mars, the god of war: cf. F. martial. Cf. MARCH the month.] 1. Of, pertaining to, or suited for, war; as, martial music; martial rule. "Martial equipage." Milton.

2. Belonging or pertaining to an army or armed force; military;—opposed to civil. Obs. or R., except in court-martial, judge martial, etc.

3. Experienced in, or inclined to, war; warlike; brave.

4. [cap.] Pert. to, or resembling, the god, or the planet, Mars.

5. [cap.] Astrol. Under the baleful influence of Mars.

6. Alchem. Of, pertaining to, or like, iron; chalybeate.

Syn.—MARTIAL, WARLIKE, MILITARY. MARTIAL suggests esp. the pomp and circumstance of war, or the distinctive qualities of a warrior; as, martial music, martial array, martial virtues, a martial air. WARLIKE emphasizes the feeling or temper which leads to or accompanies war; it may also apply to the adjuncts of war; as, "this warlike isle" (Shak.); "the warlike sound of trumpets loud and clarions" (Milton); warlike preparations. MILITARY (often opposed to naval, civil) suggests whatever pertains to a soldier or to the art or conduct of war on land; as, a military bearing, military discipline, a military expedition, road, military tactics. See BELLIGERENT.

Ma-so'ra } (mä-sō'rä), n. [NHeb. māsōrāh tradition;
Ma-so'rah } cf. Heb. māsōreth.] The early Hebrew tradition as to the correct form of the text of the Scriptures; also, in the written editions, the marginal notes, or the text and notes, embodying the results of this tradition. The written Masora consists of the notes, or notes and punctuation, to a consonantal text, called the Masoretic text, which is the basis of all editions of the Old Testament (see TEXT). The punctuation consists in pointing the vowels and indicating the accents, according to either of two systems, the Palestinian, or Tiberian, and the Babylonian (see PUNCTUATION, n., 2). The marginal notes are chiefly on the number of times that particular words and word forms occur. Simple indications of the number of times of occurrence are placed at the side of the text, forming a Ma-so'ra par'va (pär'vä), or small Masora; such notes extended to a list with citation of passages are placed on the top and bottom margins, forming a Ma-so'ra mag'na (măg'nä), or large Masora; sometimes they are at the end, forming a Ma-so'ra fi-na'lis (fĭ-nā'lĭs), or final Masora. Tradition carries the beginning of the oral Masora back as far as Ezra's time; it was reduced to writing somewhere between the 5th and 8th centuries A. D.

5. The principal part; the main body; as, the mass of men.
6. Physics. That property of a body to which its inertia is ascribed and which is commonly taken as the measure of the amount of material which it contains. Mass is one of the three fundamental quantities (length, mass, and time) on which all physical measurements are based. The masses of bodies are inversely proportional to the velocities which a given force will impart to them in a given time, and are directly proportional to their kinetic or potential energies. The mass of a body has long been regarded as invariable in amount and independent of its physical state, environment, or motion. It is now known, however, that at least in the case of electrically charged particles of matter at high velocities (corpuscles or elec-mass, v. i. [AS. massian to say trons) the mass varies with the velocity. The usual definition, that "mass is the quantity of matter in a body," is therefore faulty. Mass is commonly measured by weighing, that is, by comparing the pull of gravity on the body whose mass is to be determined with that on a standard of known mass. The result of this process is often called the weight of the body, but strictly speaking it is the pull of gravity on the body, which varies with the locality, and not with the mass itself.

2. To join as mates; to match; marry; of animals, to pair for breeding.

If she be mated with an equal husband. Shak.

3. To couple or associate as mate, or equal; to treat as comparable (with); as, to mate one's words with deeds.

mate, v. i. 1. To be or become a mate or mates, esp. in sexual companionship; as, some birds mate for life.
2. Mach. To gear properly together, as two cogwheels. ma'té, ma'te (mä'tā; măt'ā), n. [Sp. mate.] 1. An aromatic beverage prepared in South America, esp. in Paraguay, from the leaves of the Paraguay tea (Ilex paraguayensis). It resembles coffee and tea in its stimulant properties.

2. The plant, Paraguay tea.
3. Short for MATÉ GOURD.

mat'ed (māt'ĕd; -ĭd; 151), p. a. 1. Chess. Checkmated.
2. Amazed; bewildered. Obs. or Dial. Eng.

‖ mate'las'sé' (măt'lȧ'sā'), a. [F., p. p. of matelasser to cushion, to cover as with a mattress, fr. matelas mattress. See MATTRESS.] Ornamented by means of an imitation or suggestion of quilting, the surface being marked by depressed lines which form squares or lozenges in relief; as, matelassé silks. — n. A quilted ornamented dress fabric of silk or silk and wool.

mat'e-lote (măt'ẽ-lōt), mat'e-lotte (-lŏt), n. [F. matelote, fr. matelot a sailor; properly, a dish such as sailors prepare.] 1. A stew, commonly of fish, flavored with wine, and served with a wine sauce containing onions, mushrooms, etc.
2. An old dance of sailors, in double time, and somewhat like a hornpipe.

ma'ter-fa-mil'i-as (mā'tẽr-fȧ-mĭl'ĭ-ăs), n. [L.; mater mother + familias, gen. of familia family.] The mistress of a house; the mother of a family; a matron.

ma-te'ri-al (mȧ-tē'rĭ-ăl), n. 1. The substance or substances, or the parts, goods, stock, or the like, of which anything is composed or may be made, or which is necessary to the doing of something; as, dress material; writing materials.
2. Substances or specimens for study and investigation; as, museum material; herbarium material.
3. Data of any sort, such as notes, documents, sketches, etc., which may be worked up into a more finished form; as, materials for a biography; hence, facts, perceptions, ideas, etc., viewed as data for a further operation; as, material for thought; the raw material of experience.
4. Matter viewed as the relatively formless basis of reality.

Into such a caput mortuum material, substance always has, and, we may safely say, always will tend to resolve itself. James Ward.

5. Material things. Obs.

ma-te'ri-al (mȧ-tē'rĭ-ăl), a. [L. materialis, fr. materia stuff, matter: cf. F. matériel. See MATTER; cf. MATÉRIEL.]
1. Of or pert. to, or consisting of, matter; not spiritual; corporeal; physical; as, material substance or bodies.

The material elements of the universe Whewell.

2. Philos. Pertaining to the matter, as opposed to the form, of a thing; pertaining to fact, or to the real significance of a proposition, rather than to form, logical manner, or possible significance. See MATTER, 5, FORM, 9.
3. Of solid or weighty character; substantial; of consequence; not to be dispensed with; important; specif., esp. Law, such as would affect the determination of a case, the effect of an instrument, or the like; constituting a matter that is entitled to consideration; such as must be considered in deciding a case on its merits.

I shall, in the account of simple ideas, set down only such as are most material to our present purpose. Locke

4. Pertaining to, or affecting, the physical nature of man; relating to bodily wants, interests, or comforts; sensual or sensuous; bodily; as, material interests or enjoyments.
5. Having matter, or substance; having or giving knowledge of moment. Obs. "Material Horace." B. Jonson.
6. Relating to, involving, or derived from, matter as the chief constituent of the physical universe; as, material forces; the material hypothesis.

Syn. — Corporeal, bodily; weighty, essential.

material cause. See CAUSE. — m. consequence, Logic, a consequence valid because the premise from which it is drawn is a matter of fact. — m. distinction, Logic, the distinction between individuals of one species. — m. fallacy, Logic, a fallacy in which the conclusion does not follow from the premises, as in the fallacy of petitio principii. Whately. — m. form, Metaph., a form having no existence apart from matter. — m. goods, Economics, goods consisting of material things or rights in or to them. — m. logic, a logic valid within a given universe or field of application which has certain predetermined properties; — contrasted with formal logic, conceived to be perfectly general in its application. — m. object. See OBJECT, n., 4. — m. principle, Aristotelian matter. — m. unity. See UNITY.

ma-te'ri-al-ism (-ĭz'm), n. 1. Philos. Any theory which considers the facts of the universe to be sufficiently explained by the existence and nature of matter. The typical form of materialism is atomism, or the doctrine which derives all phenomena from the movements of material atoms in space. Materialism is not necessarily incompatible with a kind of spiritualism, since some materialists have considered the soul to be a fine material substance. Usually, however, materialists explain the phenomena of mind as produced by a vastly complex motion of atoms composing the brain. In modern times practically no philosophers accept this crude theory. Cf. ATOMISM, HYLOZOISM, MIND STUFF, MONISM.
2. The tendency to give undue importance to material interests; devotion to the material nature and its wants.
3. Material substances in the aggregate; matter. Obs.

ma-te'ri-al-ist (mȧ-tē'rĭ-ăl-ĭst), n. 1. An adherent of materialism.
2. One who holds to the existence of matter, as distinguished from the idealist, who denies it. Berkeley.
3. One who is absorbed in material interests; one who has no heed for the things of the spirit.

ma-te'ri-al-is'tic (-ĭs'tĭk) } a. Of or pertaining to mama-te'ri-al-is'ti-cal (-tĭ-kăl) } terialism or materialists; of the nature of materialism.

But to me his very spiritualism seemed more materialistic than his physics. C. Kingsley.

ma-te'ri-al'i-ty (-ăl'ĭ-tĭ), n.; pl. -TIES (-tĭz). 1. That which constitutes the material of a thing; substance. Obs.
2. Quality or state of being material, or that which is material; material existence; corporeity.
3. Importance in some given respect; substantiality; as, the materiality of facts. Chiefly Legal.

ma-te'ri-al-i-za'tion (mȧ-tē'rĭ-ăl-ĭ-zā'shŭn; -ī-zā'shŭn), n. Act of materializing, or state of being materialized.

ma-te'ri-al-ize (mȧ-tē'rĭ-ăl-īz), v. t.; -IZED (-īzd); -IZ'ING (-īz'ĭng). 1. To invest with material characteristics; to make perceptible to the senses; hence, to present to the mind through the medium of material objects.

Having with wonderful art and beauty materialized, if I may so call it, a scheme of abstracted notions. Tatler.

2. To regard as matter; to consider or explain by the laws or principles which are appropriate to matter.
3. To cause to assume a character appropriate to material things; to occupy with material interests; as, to materialize thought.
4. Spiritualism. To make visible in or as in a material form; — said of spirits.

A female spirit form temporarily materialized, and not distinguishable from a human being Epes Sargent.

ma-te'ri-al-ize, v. i. To appear as a material form; to take substantial shape; to become a realized fact.

ma-te'ri-al-ly, adv. 1. Philos. In respect to the matter, as dist. from the form, in respect to the material cause.
2. With or with respect to, or in the state of, matter, or physical substance.

I do not mean that anything is separate from a body by fire that was materially preëxistent in it. Boyle.

3. In a manner involving the essentials or merits; to the point; as, to speak materially. Obs.
4. In an important manner or degree; substantially; essentially; as, it materially concerns us to know the real motives of our actions.

ma-te'ri-al-man (-măn), n.; pl. -MEN (-mĕn). One who supplies materials, esp. those used in a construction or building.

ma-te'ri-a med'i-ca (mȧ-tē'rĭ-ȧ mĕd'ĭ-kȧ). [L. See MATTER; MEDICAL.] 1. Material or substance used in the composition of remedies; — a general term for all substances used as curative agents in medicine.
2. That branch of medical science which treats of the nature and properties of all the substances employed for the cure of diseases; one of the two branches of pharmacology.

‖ ma'té'ri-el' (mȧ'tā'rē-ĕl'), n. [F. See MATERIAL.] Material part of a thing; material supplies; esp., that in a complex system which constitutes the materials, or instruments employed, in distinction from the personnel, or persons employed, as the baggage, munitions, provisions, etc., of an army, or the buildings, libraries, and apparatus of a college, in distinction from its officers.

ma-ter'nal (mȧ-tûr'năl), a. [L. maternus, fr. mater mother: cf. F. maternel. See MOTHER.] 1. Of or pertaining to a mother; becoming to a mother; motherly; as, maternal love; maternal tenderness.
2. Being a mother, or considered as a mother; as, a maternal bird; one's maternal country. Now Rare.
3. Derived or received from, or connected through, one's mother; as, a maternal inheritance; maternal relatives.
4. Of or pert. to maternity; as, maternal hospitals. Rare.
5. Supplying motherly care; as, the maternal schools in France, for children from two to six years old.

Syn. — See MOTHERLY.

ma-ter'nal-ty (-nĭ-tĭ), n.; pl. -TIES (-tĭz). [Cf. F. maternité, LL. maternitas.] 1. State or quality of being a mother; the character or relation of a mother; the qualities naturally belonging to motherhood; motherliness.
2. Med. Short for maternity hospital, a lying-in hospital.

mat'er-nize (măt'ẽr-nīz; mā'tẽr-), v. t.; -NIZED (-nīzd); -NIZ'ING (-nīz'ĭng). Med. To make (cow's milk) resemble mother's milk.

mat'grass' (măt'grȧs'), n. a = MATWEED a. b A low, tufted European grass (Nardus stricta) of little agricultural value, though affording pasturage for sheep. c Marram, or beach grass. d = BLACK GRASS d.

math (măth), n. [AS. mæð; akin to māwan to mow, G. mahd math. See MOW to cut (grass).] A mowing, or that which is gathered by mowing. Obs. or Dial., except in combination. Cf. AFTERMATH and LATTERMATH.

math/e-mat'ic (măth'ĕ-măt'ĭk), a. [F. mathématique, or L. mathematicus, Gr. μαθηματικός disposed to learn, belonging to learning or the sciences, esp. to mathematics, fr. μάθημα that which is learned, learning, pl. μαθήματα things learned, learning, science, esp. mathematical science, fr. μαθεῖν, μανθάνειν, learn.] Mathematical. Now Rare.

math/e-mat'i-cal (-ĭ-kăl), a. [See MATHEMATIC.] Of or pertaining to mathematics; according to mathematics; hence, theoretically precise; accurate; as, mathematical geography; mathematical instruments; mathematical exactness. — math/e-mat'i-cal-ly, adv.

mathematical angle, Math., amount of sweep, turning, or rotation (in a plane, round a point) that brings a line (or half line, or line segment) from some given initial position to a given final one, as the angle AOB. In this sense an angle may be of any size, since OA may rotate any number of times round O before stopping in the position OB. Also, an angle may be positive or negative, according as the turning is in one sense or in the opposite one. When the rotation is complete, once round from the position OA to the same position again, so that the two sides of the angle coincide, the angle is called a round angle. Angle measures or constitutes the separateness of two lines passing through the same point, just as distance measures or constitutes the separateness of two points lying on the same line; these are therefore the two irreducible elements of metric geometry. — m. expectation, the product of the value of a property by the probability which sets of getting it. — m. geography. See GEOGRAPHY, 2. — m. induction, an endless-chain argument of this type: If a certain property belongs to any member of a system of numbers, it belongs to the next; but it does belong to a certain member; hence it belongs to the next, and to the next, without end. Thus if the sum of the first n integers has the form $\frac{1}{2}n(n+1)$, then the sum of the $(n+1)$ integers has the same form, since $\frac{1}{2}n(n+1)+n+1=\frac{1}{2}(n+1)\{(n+1)+1\}$; but this does hold for $n=2$, since $1+2=\frac{1}{2}.2\,(2+1)$; therefore it holds for $n=3$, therefore for $n=4$, and so on without end. This form of inference, the basis of all reasoning about numbers, has been called Fermatian, from its originator, Pierre de Fermat (1601-65), and also recurrence. Of late years the question of its true nature has been much discussed, as by Dedekind, Poincaré, Frege, and Keyser. — m. logic. — ALGEBRAIC LOGIC. See LOGIC, SYMBOLIC LOGIC. — m. necessity. math/e-ma-ti'cian (măth'ĕ-mă-tĭsh'ăn), n. [Cf. F. mathématicien.] One versed in mathematics.

math'e-mat'ics (-măt'ĭks), n. [ME. matematik, mathematique, OF. mathematique, F. mathématique(s), L. mathematica, sing., Gr. μαθηματική (sc. ἐπιστήμη) science. See MATHEMATIC, a.; -ICS.] That science, or class of sciences, which treats of the exact relations existing between quantities or magnitudes and operations, and of the methods by which, in accordance with these relations, quantities sought are deducible from others known or supposed; the science of serial, spatial, quantitative, and magnitudinal relations; the science of order. Mathematics is usually classified as follows: (1) Pure mathematics, the class of all propositions of the form "A implies B," where A and B are themselves propositions involving one or more variables, but no constants except logical constants (B. Russell). (2) Abstract mathematics, that which deals with pure order, form, and extent, regardless of any material or other content; the doctrine of the necessary implications of forms, extents, and orders; — called also pure mathematics. (3) Applied mathematics, that in which the forms, extents, and orders of abstract mathematics are viewed as supplied with content from observation, and in which problems are treated and conclusions drawn that are connected with human life or experience. Higher mathematics, as distinguished from elementary mathematics, includes all beyond ordinary arithmetic and algebra, geometry, and trigonometry.

ma'tri-arch (mā'trĭ-ärk), n. [mater mother + -arch.] A woman who is the head and ruler of her family; esp., a mother who rules her family or descendants by virtue of her position. See MATRIARCHY.

ma'tri-ar'chal (-är'kăl), a. Of or pertaining to a matriarch or matriarchy. — ma'tri-ar'chal-ism (-ĭz'm), n.

ma'tri-ar'chate (-kāt), n. A matriarchal state or government; the fact or theory of matriarchal institutions.

ma'tri-arch'y (mā'trĭ-är'kĭ), n.; pl. -ARCHIES (-kĭz). A state or stage of social evolution in which descent is reckoned only in the female line, all children belonging to the mother's clan. Such a system increases the mother's social and political importance, making her the head of the family and the guardian of religious rites and traditions. Hence, with many writers matriarchy means not only descent reckoned through the female line (called uterine descent, or cognation), but also rulership by woman. Others, however, discriminate the rights and customs characteristic of uterine descent, as mother-right (adaptation of G. Mutterrecht), from the political or domestic supremacy of woman, known as gynecocracy, or gynocracy, "rulership by women," or metrocracy, "rulership by mothers." Matriarchy in the narrow sense (that is, as "mother-right") is found among many primitive peoples; whether it ever existed in the broader sense is disputed. Cf. CLAN, 2; see PATRIARCHY.

Mat'ri-ca'ri-a (măt'rĭ-kā'rĭ-ă; 115), n. [NL. See MATRIX. So named in allusion to the alleged medicinal value of some species.] Bot. A genus of asteraceous herbs having broadly involucrate heads with white rays and yellow disk flowers, the achenes ribbed on the inner face. The species are natives chiefly of the Old World, several being naturalized as weeds in parts of the United States. M. chamomilla is the camomile. M. inodora is the corn mayweed.

mat'ri-cid'al (măt'rĭ-sīd'ăl; mā'trĭ-), a. Of or pertaining to matricide.

matted glass, a kind of enameled glass, having a dull ground.

mat'ter (-ẽr), n. One that mats ; specif., a mattoir.

mat'ter (măt'ẽr), n. [ME. matere, F. matière, fr. L. materia ; perh. akin to L. mater mother. Cf. MOTHER, MADEIRA, MATERIAL.] 1. That of which any physical object is composed ; material ; substance ; constituents ; elements ; as, the matter of the globe ; also, material prepared or selected for any purpose ; a particular kind or portion of material ; as, coloring matter ; a ball of matter ; the cortex of the brain is formed of gray matter.

2. Specif., substance excreted from living animal bodies ; that which is thrown out or discharged by suppuration, as from a tumor, boil, or abscess ; pus ; purulent substance.

3. Physics. Whatever occupies space ; that which is conceived to constitute the body of the outward or physical universe and, with energy, to form the basis of objective phenomena. The nature of matter is unknown, and the physicist can only describe certain of its properties and speculate on its structure. Occupancy of space implies extension and impenetrability. The study of bodies under the action of forces has led to the conception of mass as a universal attribute of matter. Various phenomena indicate that all known forms of matter are composed of particles, termed atoms, too small for direct observation, but the size of which can be definitely estimated. These were long assumed to be the ultimate parts beyond which matter cannot be subdivided, but the phenomena of radioactivity and the properties of gases at very low pressures compel the assumption of still smaller particles (corpuscles, or electrons) of which the atoms are composed. The fact that these always have an electric charge, and that their mass is therefore a function of their velocity, has led to the view that matter is ultimately electrical in constitution. Matter exists in three states or phases : solid, liquid, and gas. See LIQUID ; also, GAS, SOLID.

4. Material or substance regarded as the passive recipient of form ; hence, material cause ; that which is or may be given a new form.

> He is the matter of virtue. B. Jonson.

5. Specif., Philos., the indeterminate subject of reality ; the wholly or virtually passive element in the universe ; the unorganized basis or stuff of experience which when combined with form, or the ideal element, gives phenomena, or real objects. The metaphysical conception of matter as that which combines or synthesizes the variable elements of existence, though in itself wholly indeterminate, takes its rise in the Platonic and Aristotelian notion of ὕλη, the potential substance or substratum upon which form (εἶδος, ἰδέα) acts to produce realities. This substratum, or subject of change and development, is conceived to possess no attributes except the capacity of being acted upon by form, and (especially when existing as a combination of matter and form, that is, as reality) a power of resistance or implasticity, by reason of which it yields only in part to the operation of formal causes and so gives rise to the imperfections of reality. The notion of matter as substance or substratum was developed in Scholastic philosophy from the Aristotelian conception. By Descartes this was identified with extended substance, and by later philosophers, as Locke, has often been confounded with the physical conception. According to the Lockian view, matter is the cause of sensation, but is not itself directly perceived. Berkeley denied the existence of any such matter, but, like modern phenomenalists, he did not question the concrete reality of an objective element in experience, that is, of perceptible physical objects possessing the attributes of extension, rigidity, inertia, etc. In Kantian idealism the distinction of matter and form appears in another guise, matter being the sensible stuff or sensuous content of experience (in Kantian language, the " manifold "), while form is the pure form of the understanding and the a priori sensible forms, time and space. Cf. FORM, IDEA, NOUMENON, SUBSTANCE.

6. That which is or is to be treated or dealt with ; concern ; affair ; business ; hence, indefinitely, a thing or things ; as, a matter of fact ; matters of importance.

> To help the matter, the alchemists call in many vanities out of astrology. Bacon.
> Some young female seems to have carried matters so far, that she is ripe for asking advice. Spectator.

7. That with regard to or about which anything takes place or is done ; the thing aimed at or treated of ; subject of action, discussion, consideration, feeling, complaint, legal action, or the like ; theme ; subject-matter. " If the matter should be tried by duel." Bacon.

> Son of God, Savior of men ! Thy name > Shall be the copious matter of my song. Milton.

8. Ground ; reason ; cause ; the cause or occasion, esp. of anything disagreeable or distressing ; difficulty ; trouble.

> And this is the matter why interpreters upon that passage in Hosea will not consent it to be a true story. Milton.

9. Affair worthy of account ; thing of consequence ; importance ; significance ; moment ; — chiefly in the phrases what matter ? no matter, and the like.

> A prophet some, and some a poet, cry ;
> No matter which, so neither of them lie. Dryden.

10. Means ; provision for something. Obs.

mat'u-rant (măt'ū-rănt), n. [L. maturans, p. pr. See MATURATE.] Med. A medicine, or application, which promotes suppuration.

mat'u-rate (-rāt), v. t. ; MAT'U-RAT'ED (-rāt'ĕd) ; MAT'U-RAT'ING (-rāt'ĭng). [L. maturatus, p. p. of maturare to make ripe, fr. maturus ripe, mature. See MATURE, v. & a.]

1. To promote the perfect suppuration of (an abscess).

2. To bring to ripeness or maturity ; to ripen. Obs. or R.

> A tree may be maturated artificially. Fuller

3. Alchemy, etc. To purify (a metal) or to concentrate the metal of (an ore or the like). Obs.

mat'u-rate, v. i. To ripen ; mature ; specif., to suppurate.

mat'u-ra'tion (-rā'shŭn), n. [L. maturatio a hastening : cf. F. maturation.] 1. Process of suppurating perfectly ; the formation of pus or matter.

2. Process of bringing, or of coming, to full development, ripeness, or maturity.

> The genesis and maturation of a planet. Emerson.

3. a Alchemy. Conversion of a base metal into gold. Obs. b Development of one form of matter from another. Obs.

4. Biol. a The final series of stages in the formation of the egg, by which its nucleus is prepared for union with the sperm nucleus. In most animals in which the process has been studied, it is accomplished by two successive mitotic divisions of the egg with no intervening resting stage, which are peculiar in that they diminish the bulk of the egg only imperceptibly, the cells (polar bodies) which are budded off being very minute ; also in that the number of chromosomes into which the chromatin of the egg nucleus resolves itself preparatory to these divisions is but half the usual number, a provision against doubling the number of chromosomes in the subsequent process of fertilization (which see). The polar bodies (being formed by mitotic division) each receive, in spite of their minute size, as much of the chromatin as remains in the egg, hence the matured egg contains but one fourth of its original amount, the remaining three fourths which pass into the polar bodies being lost, as the polar bodies do not develop. See REDUCING DIVISION. b In a broader sense, the final process of mitotic division in the development of the sperm or spermatozoön, in which there is also a reduction of the chromosomes to one half the original number.

☞ While similar phenomena occur in plants, they are differently interpreted by botanists, owing to the more evident alternation of generations resulting from the longer interval between reduction and fertilization.

Max., or max. Abbr. Maximilian; maximum.

max'il-lar (măk'sĭl-lär), a. & n. Anat. & Zoöl. = MAXILLARY.

ternal maxillary vein, and unites with the temporal to form the temporo-maxillary vein. The external maxillary artery is the facial artery. maxillary nerve, Anat., either of two nerves of the face. The inferior maxillary is the third and largest division of the fifth cranial nerve. It arises by a large sensory root from the Gasserian ganglion, which leaves the skull by the foramen ovale and is joined by the small motor root of the fifth nerve. It supplies the lower jaw and its teeth, parts of the face, tongue, etc. The motor fibers supply chiefly the muscles of mastication. The superior maxillary is the second division of the fifth cranial nerve. It also arises from the Gasserian ganglion, and is sensory only, supplying the upper jaw and its teeth, parts of the nose, etc. It leaves the skull by the foramen rotundum. See TRIFACIAL. — m. sinus, Anat., the antrum of Highmore.

max'il-la-ry (măk'sĭ-lā-rĭ), n.; pl. -RIES (-rĭz). Anat. & Zoöl. a A maxillary bone or maxilla. In man, the superior maxillary is the largest bone of the face, and consists of the maxilla proper and premaxilla fused together. With its fellow of the opposite side it forms the lower part of the face and the hard palate and the floor and outer walls of the nasal cavity. Its body contains a large cavity, the antrum of Highmore. The inferior maxillary is the mandible. b A maxillary nerve or blood vessel.

max-il'il-ped (măk-sĭl'ĭ-pĕd), n. [maxilla + L. pes, pedis, foot.] Zoöl. One of the mouth appendages of Crustacea, situated next behind the maxillæ. Crabs, lobsters, etc., have three pairs, but many of the lower Crustacea have but one pair functioning as mouth parts, the last two pairs being represented by true legs. — max-il'il-ped'a-ry (-pĕd'ā-rĭ), a.

max-il'lo- (măk-sĭl'ō-). A combining form indicating connection with, or relation to, the maxilla or maxillæ.

max-il'lo-pal'a-tal (-păl'ā-tăl), a. Anat. Pertaining to the maxilla and palatine bones. — n. An inwardly projecting process of the maxillary bone present in the skull of birds and extremely variable in size and shape.

max'im (măk'sĭm), n. [L. maxima (sc. sententia, or a similar noun), the greatest sentence, proposition, or axiom, i. e., of the greatest weight or authority, fem. fr. maximus greatest, superl. of magnus great: cf. F. maxime. See MAGNITUDE; cf. MAXIMUM.] 1. An axiom. Obs.

"T is their maxim, Love is love's reward. Dryden.

2. A general truth or a rule of conduct expressed in sententious form; esp., a saying of a proverbial nature embodying a moral or practical precept.

3. Music. The longest note in medieval use, equal to two longs (three in "perfect" time) or four breves; a large.

Syn. — Aphorism, apothegm, adage, proverb. See AXIOM.

max'well (măks'wĕl), n. [After James C. Maxwell, English physicist.] Elec. The C. G. S. unit of magnetic flux; a C. G. S. line of force. It was adopted as international unit, Paris, 1900.

Max'well's de'mon (măks'wĕlz). Physics. A hypothetical being of intelligence imagined by J. C. Maxwell to illustrate the limitations of the second law of thermodynamics. The demon is supposed to be able to watch the separate molecules of a gas in their motions and, by opening and closing a door in a partition between two bodies of gas, to permit the passage in one direction of those of high velocity and exclude others, thus bringing about a difference of temperature between the two masses of gas.

Maxwell's law. Physics. The principle that the specific inductive capacity of a medium is equal to the square of its index of refraction. It is a consequence of the electromagnetic theory of light, but in practice has many exceptions.

Maxwell's needle. Mech. A contrivance consisting of a hollow tube into which four equal short pieces of tube, two weighted, can be slipped to vary the moment of inertia. It is used esp. as the weight in a simple kind of oscillator.

may (mā), n. [AS. mæg; akin to E. maiden.] A maiden. Archaic or Scot. & Dial. Eng.

may, v. pres., sing., 1st & 3d pers. MAY, 2d MAY'EST (mā'ĕst), MAYST (māst), pl. MAY; pret. MIGHT (mīt). Infinitive and participles lacking in present use. [AS. pres. mæg I am able, pret. meahte, mihte; akin to D. mogen, G. mögen, OHG. mugan, magan, Icel. mega, Goth. magan, Russ. moch'. Cf. DISMAY, MAIN strength, MIGHT, n.] 1. [v. i.] To have power; to be able; sometimes specif., to have power to prevent. Obs.

2. As auxiliary, followed by the infinitive without to, qualifying the sense of another verb by adding that of: a Ability; competency; — now oftener expressed by can.

How may a man, said he, with idle speech, Be won to spoil the castle of his health! Spenser.

For what he [the king] may do is of two kinds; what he may do as just, and what he may do as possible Bacon

b Liberty; opportunity; permission; possibility; as, he may go; you may be right. It is sometimes used to avoid bluntness in a question or remark. "How old may Phillis be, you ask." Prior.

Thou mayest be no longer steward. Luke xvi. 2.

☞ Except in indirect discourse, the preterit indicative might is now rarely used in this sense, "he might," etc., being now expressed by some such phrase as, "it was possible for him to," "he was free to," etc. Might be, might do, etc., were formerly used for may have been, done, etc. The subjunctive might, "would be able to," "would perhaps," is used esp. in the principal clauses of conditional sentences and in conditional statements; as, with a little coaxing he might come. It is often used colloquially to suggest an omission or neglect; as, you might at least apologize.

c Desire or wish, as in prayer, imprecation, benediction, and the like, the subjunctive might denoting wish without expectation of fulfillment. "May you live happily." Dryden. d Contingency; — used, esp. in clauses of purpose, result, concession, indirect question, in indefinite relative clauses, and the like, to form a periphrastic subjunctive; as, he flatters that he may win favor; though the chain may break; whatever might befall.

☞ May is often used with an ellipsis of the infinitive, esp. where it is readily supplied from the context. "Gather ye rosebuds while ye may." Herrick.

☞ Where the sense, purpose, or policy of a statute require it, may as used in the statute will be construed as must or shall; otherwise may has its ordinary permissive and discretionary force.

Syn. — MAY, CAN. So far as can and may come into comparison, CAN expresses ability, whether physical or mental; MAY implies permission or sanction; as, he will do it, if he possibly can; I shall call to-morrow, if I may; "When Duty whispers low, Thou must, the youth replies, I can" (Emerson); "I am gone into the fields. . . For reflection, you may come to-morrow" (Shelley). The use of can for may in asking permission is incorrect. When can and may emphasize the idea of possibility, this possibility is usually dependent, in the case of can, upon objective conditions, in the case of may, upon such subjective contingencies as render a supposition (often nothing more) admissible; as, "Can one go on hot coals and not be burnt?" (Prov. 6. 28); "Win her consent to you; if any man may, you may as soon as any" (Shak.); it may rain; he may die. See WILL, OUGHT, CAN.

may be, and it may be, are used as equivalent to possibly, perhaps, by chance, peradventure. See 1st MAYBE. — m. well with, can well bear or endure. Obs. Langland.

measure-and-a-half door, Arch., a door with molding on one side only. — measure of a linear assemblage, Math., the total length of a denumerable infinity of intervals not overlapping, but containing all the points of an assemblage.

TABLE OF MEASURES.

NOTE. The British bushel is the imperial bushel of 2218.2 cu. in.; the United States bushel is the Winchester bushel of 2150.4 cu. in. The wine gallon, or U. S. gallon, contains 231 cu. in.; the British, or imperial, gallon is almost exactly 1/5 larger. In the first column of equivalents, where two values are given, one in roman and the other in italic type, that in the roman type is the value for the United States; that in the italic, for Great Britain. Where only roman type is used it indicates that the equivalent has the same value in both countries.

1 Dry measure at Lisbon. 2 At Paris. 3 Usual value for wine. 4 In Greece. 5 Attic standard.
6 Values in the upper line are the earlier. 7 Value varies with the locality; that given is the one established by treaty and used esp. in the treaty ports. 8 In the usage of the Surveyor-general's office, foot means the Cape foot except where the English foot is specified. In common usage the reverse is true, at least with the English-speaking population.

* Further information will be found at the vocabulary entry of the name of the measure.

1 Dry measure at Lisbon. 3 Usual value for wine. 5 Attic standard. 6 Values in the upper line are the earlier.
7 Value varies with the locality ; that given is the one established by treaty and used esp. in the treaty ports.
15 At Constantinople. 17 Government value. 18 At Rome. 19 At Riga. 20 At Hamburg.
* Further information will be found in the vocabulary entry of the name of the measure meas'ure (mĕzh'ûr ; 250), v. t. ; MEAS'URED (mĕzh'ûrd); MEAS'UR-ING (-ûr-ĭng). [F. mesurer, L. mensurare See MEASURE, n.] 1. To limit; regulate. Obs.

2. To compute or ascertain the extent, degree, quantity, dimensions, or capacity of, by a rule or standard ; to take the dimensions of ; hence, to estimate ; value ; appraise.

Great are thy works, Jehovah, infinite Thy power ! what thought can measure thee ? Milton.

3. To allot or distribute by measure ; to set off or apart by measure ; — often with out or off.

With what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again. Matt. vii. 2.

4. To determine or lay off in measuring ; as, to measure out a given distance ; to measure a hundred yards.

5. To pass through or over in journeying, as if laying off and determining the distance.

A true devoted pilgrim is not weary
To measure kingdoms with his feeble steps. Shak.

6. To mark the bounds or limits of.

7. To serve as the measure of ; as, the thermometer measures changes of temperature.

8. To adjust to a standard ; to bring into comparison or competition (with) ; as, to measure one's skill with a rival.

9. To adjust by a rule or standard ; to estimate with reference to a standard or measure.

Measure your desires by your fortunes. Jer. Taylor.

10. To express in measures, or meter. Obs.

to measure one's length, to stretch out to one's length, as by falling flat. — to m. strength, to test ability by contest. — to m. swords, lit., to compare the length of swords, as for fighting ; hence, to fight with swords.

meas'ure (mĕzh'ûr), v. i. 1. To take or make a measurement or measurements ; to measure something.

2. To result, or turn out, on being measured, esp. in respect of length, breadth, thickness, capacity, or the like, according to a standard ; as, the cloth measured three fourths of a yard ; the two pieces measure equally. Also, to admit of being measured.

3. To give or allot measure.

meas'ured (-ûrd), p. a. 1. Regulated or determined by a standard ; hence, equal ; uniform ; graduated ; limited ; moderated ; as, he walked with measured steps ; calculated; deliberated ; as, he spoke in no measured terms.

2. Metrical ; rhythmical.

measured music. = MENSURABLE MUSIC.

meas'ure-less, a. Without measure ; unlimited ; immeasurable. — meas'ure-less-ly, adv. — meas'ure-less-ness, n.

Syn. — Boundless, limitless, endless, unbounded, unlimited, vast, immense, infinite, immeasurable.

meas'ure-ment (mĕzh'ûr-mĕnt), n. 1. Act or result of measuring something ; mensuration ; specif., Math., the correlation with numbers of entities that are other than numbers or aggregates.

A measurement . . . consists in the comparison of any concrete quantity with a definite portion of the same physical magnitude selected as a unit. Pop. Sci. Monthly.

Measurement is the equation of any whole, by comparison, to a numerical aggregate of determinate parts. B. Bosanquet.

2. The extent, size, capacity, amount, or quantity ascertained by measuring ; as, its measurement is five acres.

3. A system of measures.

measurement cargo or goods. Naut. Cargo, or goods, so light and bulky that they are charged for carriage, or limited in amount, by their bulk and not by their weight.

meas'ur-er (mĕzh'ûr-ẽr), n. 1. One who measures ; one whose occupation or duty is to measure commodities in market.

2. An implement that measures, as a gauge.

3. A measuring worm.

meas'ur-ing, p. pr. & vb. n. of MEASURE.

measuring cast, lit., a cast, or throw, in competition, so nearly equal to another that the result must be determined by measuring ; hence, a question in doubt ; a close thing. — m. faucet, a faucet which permits only a given quantity of liquid to pass each time it is opened, or one by means of which the liquid which passes can be measured. — m. glass, a graduated medicine or dispensing glass. — m. machine, Mach., an apparatus for measuring comparatively large pieces of work held between two jaws one of which is adjustable. Measuring machines are commonly made to read to the ten-thousandth of an inch. — m. wheel, a kind of odometer, or perambulator. — m. worm, the larva of any geometrid moth. See GEOMETRIDÆ.

meat (mēt), n. [ME. mete, AS. mete ; akin to OS. mat, meti, OHG. maz food, Icel. matr, Sw. mat, Dan. mad, Goth. mats, and perh. to D. met hashed meat, G. *mett*wurst sausage. Cf. MAST fruit, MATE a companion.] 1. Food in general ; anything eaten for nourishment, either by man or beast ; esp., solid food ; hence, the edible part of anything ; as, the meat of a lobster, a nut, or an egg.

And God said, Behold, I have given you every herb bearing seed, . . . to you it shall be for meat. Gen. i. 29.

2. An article of food ; a "dish." Obs.

3. The flesh of animals used as food ; as, a breakfast of bread and fruit without meat ; specif., flesh (= FLESH, n., 2), as distinguished from fish or fowl.

4. Hunting. Animals as a source of flesh food ; quarry.

5. A meal ; specif., dinner ; the chief meal. Obs., except in the phrases at, before, or after meat, etc.

me-a'tal (mē-ā'tăl), a. Of, like, or pertaining to, a meatus.

2. Having (such) meat ; — used chiefly in composition.

me-at'o-tome (mē-ăt'ō-tōm ; mē-ā'tō-), n. [meatus + -tome.] Surg. An instrument for cutting into the urethra to enlarge its orifice. — me'a-tot'o-my (mē'ā-tŏt'ō-mĭ), n.

me-a'tus (mē-ā'tŭs), n. ; pl. E. -TUSES (-ĕz ; -ĭz ; 151), L. -TUS. [L., a going, passage, fr. meare to go.] Anat. a A natural passage or canal. b The opening of such a passage. — me-a'tus au'di-to'ri-us (ô'dĭ-tō'rĭ-ŭs ; 201), m. a-cu'sti-cus (ā-kūs'tĭ-kŭs) [L. auditorius of hearing, NL. acusticus, fr. Gr. ἀκουστικός], Anat., the auditory meatus. — meatuses of the nose, irregular longitudinal channels or passages formed by the turbinated bones on the lateral walls of the nasal cavity. The superior, middle, and inferior meatuses are situated below the turbinated bones of corresponding name. — me-a'tus u'ri-na'ri-us (ū'rĭ-nā'rĭ-ŭs ; 115) [NL. urinarius urinary], Anat., the external orifice of the urethra.

meat'y (mēt'ĭ), a. ; MEAT'I-ER (-ĭ-ẽr) ; MEAT'I-EST. Abounding in, or resembling, meat ; hence, pithy.

Mec'ca (mĕk'ä), n. An Arabian city, birthplace of Mohammed and holy city of the Moslems (cf. CAABA) ; hence, a place esteemed as the goal of a pilgrimage. — Mecca balsam. = BALM OF GILEAD a. — M. gum. See GUM ARABIC.

Mec'can (-ăn), a. Of or pertaining to Mecca. — n. An inhabitant of Mecca.

me-chan'ic (mē-kăn'ĭk), a. [L. mechanicus, Gr. μηχανικός, fr. μηχανή a machine : cf. F. mécanique. See MACHINE.] 1. Pertaining to manual labor ; involving manual skill ; as, the mechanic arts.

2. Of or pert. to a mechanic or artisan, or the artisan class.

Mechanic slaves,
With greasy aprons, rules, and hammers. Shak.

3. Hence, rude ; common ; vulgar ; base. Obs.

To make a god, a hero, or a king Descend to a mechanic dialect. Roscommon.

4. Of the nature of, relating to, or derived from, a machine or machines ; like a machine or machinery ; following, or constructed on, the principles of mechanics ; mechanical ; as, mechanic devices. "Mechanic philosophers." Ray.

5. Having an aptitude for mechanics ; inventive. Obs.

me-chan'ic, n. [Cf. F. mécanique mechanics. See MECHANIC, a.] 1. Art or application of handicraft or of the laws of force and motion ; also, any mechanical art. Obs.

2. [Cf. OF. mecanique.] One who practices any mechanic art ; one skilled or employed in shaping and uniting materials, as wood, metal, etc., into any kind of structure, machine, or other object, requiring the use of tools or instruments ; an artisan ; an artificer.

3. A low, vulgar, or base-born fellow. Obs.

Syn. — See WORKMAN.

me-chan'i-cal (-ĭ-kăl), a. [See MECHANIC, a.] 1. Of, pert. to, or concerned with, manual labor ; engaged in manual labor ; of the artisan class ; hence, Obs., vulgar ; common.

2. Of, pertaining to, or concerned with, machinery or mechanism ; made or formed by a machine or with tools ; as, mechanical precision ; mechanical products.

We have also divers mechanical arts. Bacon.

measuring point. Chiefly Ordnance. A rod of wood with metal points at the ends, used for interior measurements.

meat. Obs. or dial. Eng. var. of METE, to measure.

meat, v. t. & i. To supply with, or partake of, food ; to feed ; board. Obs. or Scot. & Dial. Eng.

meat'bird', n. The Canada jay. Local, U. S. & Canada.

meate. † MEET ; METE, to measure.

meat earth. Soil, esp. when fertile. Dial. Eng.

meaten. Obs. p. p. of METE, deal out.

meat fly. A flesh fly.

meath, meathe (mēth). Obs. or dial. Eng. vars. of MEAD, a drink.

meathe. † MATHE, MEAD.

meat'i-ness (mēt'Y-nĕs), n. See -NESS.

meat'less, a. See -LESS.

meat'man', n. A butcher.

meat offering Jew. Antiq. See OFFERING.

me'a-tom'e-ter (mē'ā-tŏ m'ē-tẽr), n. [meatus + -meter.] Med. An instrument designed to be used for measuring the width of a meatus.

me-at'o-scope (mē-ăt'ō-skōp ; mē-ā'tō-), n. [meatus + -scope.] Med. An instrument designed to be used for examining the meatus of the urethra.

meature. † METEOR.

meaugh. Dial. Eng. var. of MAUGH. Obs.

meaw. † MEW, MIAOW.

meaze, n. Prob., meuse. Obs.

mea'zel. † MEASLE meaz'ling. † MIZZLING.

meb'be (mĕb'ẽ). Dial var. of MAYBE.

meble. † MOBLE.

Meb-au'ta (mĕb-ôô'tä), n. [Ar. mabsût outstretched.] See STAR.

Me-bun'nai (mē-bŭn'ī ; -ĭ-ī). Bib.

mec. † MEEK.

M. E. C. Abbr. Member of the Executive Council.

Me-cap'ter-a (mē-kăp'tẽr-ä), n. pl. [NL.] = MECOPTERA.

me-ca'te (mā-kā'tē), n. [Sp. ; fr. Mex. mecatl.] 1. A rope of hair or of maguey fiber.

2. See MEASURE, Table.

Mec'ca-wee' (mĕk'ä-wē'), a. Of or pertaining to, or characteristic of, Mecca. — n. A native or inhabitant of Mecca.

mecche. † MATCH.

Mecenas. † MÆCENAS.

Mech (mĕch), n. sing. & pl. A primitive, partially Hinduized, Mongoloid race of northeastern India, chiefly Bhutan and Nepal, mostly migratory forest dwellers.

mech. Abbr. Mechanical ; mechanics.

Mechael. † MICHAEL.

me'chall. a. [L. moechus adulterer.] Adulterous. Obs.

3. Done as if by a machine; uninfluenced by will or emotion; proceeding automatically, or by habit, without special intention or reflection; as, mechanical singing; mechanical verses; mechanical service.
4. Automatic (more or less); as, a mechanical telegraph or telephone. Cf. MECHANICAL STOKER.
5. Pertaining to, governed by, or in accordance with, mechanics, or the laws of motion; pertaining to the quantitative relations of force and matter, as distinguished from mental, vital, chemical, etc.; as, mechanical principles; a mechanical theory; mechanical deposits.

We are accustomed to think of mechanical determination as a resultant of any de facto combination of forces. B. Bosanquet.

6. Obtained by trial, by measurements, etc.; approximate; empirical. Cf. GEOMETRIC.

mechanical advantage, Mech., the theoretical ratio of the "resistance" to the "power" in a machine (equal to the inverse ratio of their virtual velocities). — m. astronomy, the application of mechanical and mathematical principles to account for and predict the motions of the heavenly bodies; gravitational astronomy; — formerly called physical astronomy. — m. construction. See GEOMETRICAL CONSTRUCTION. — m. curve, Math., a transcendental curve. Obs. — m. equivalent of heat, the relation between the values of the unit of heat and the unit of mechanical work; the mechanical energy which must be expended to raise the temperature of a unit weight of water one degree. It was first determined by Joule, and hence is called also Joule's equivalent, and represented by the symbol J. According to the most accurate determinations the value of J, expressed in joules per calorie between 0° and 100° C. (mean) is 4.183, and at 20° C., 4.181. This is approximately equal to 426 kilogram meters on the centigrade scale, or 777 foot pounds on the Fahrenheit scale; that is, the heat required to raise the temperature of a pound of water one degree Fahrenheit would, if it could be transformed without loss, raise the same amount of water to a height of 777 feet. — m. hysteresis, Mech., a phenomenon, resembling magnetic hysteresis, observed in elastic bodies subjected to stress, resulting in less energy being given out by the body in recovery than is spent on it in deformation, and causing a slight temporary set. — m. inspiration. Theol. See INSPIRATION, 2. — m. leech. Med. See LEECH, 3. — m. maneuvers or manœuvres, Mil., the mounting, dismounting, and moving of cannon or their mounts, esp. by the aid of mechanical appliances. — m. mixture. Physics & Chem. See MIXTURE. — m. philosophy, a system of metaphysics which employs only the principles of mechanics to explain known phenomena. — m. power, Mech., any of the simple machines, formerly supposed to be the elements from which more complex machines are built up. See SIMPLE MACHINE. — m. quadrature, Astron., approximative quadrature effected by parallel lines dividing a plane surface into parts small enough to be treated as rectilinear; integration by a similar method. — m. solution, Math., a solution of a problem by any art or contrivance not strictly geometrical, as by means of the ruler and compasses, or other instruments. — m. stoker, Mech., an apparatus for feeding fuel to and stoking a furnace fire. — m. tissue, Bot., any form of tissue serving as a supporting framework in plants, as sclerenchyma, collenchyma, various portions of the vascular system, etc. See PARENCHYMA, PROSENCHYMA.

me·chan'i·cal (mĕ-kăn'ĭ-kăl), n. Obs. 1. A mechanic. 2. pl. Mechanics; also, details of mechanism.

mech'a·ni'cian (mĕk'ə-nĭsh'ăn), n. [Cf. F. mécanicien. See MECHANIC, a.] One skilled in the theory or construction of machines; a machinist.

me·chan'i·co—chem'i·cal (mĕ-kăn'ĭ-kō-kĕm'ĭ-kăl), a. Pertaining to, connected with, or dependent upon, both mechanics and chemistry.

me·chan'ics (mĕ-kăn'ĭks), n. [Cf. F. mécanique. See MECHANIC, a.] That science, or branch of applied mathematics, which treats of the action of forces on bodies. That part of mechanics which considers the action of forces in producing rest or equilibrium is called statics; that which relates to such action in producing motion is called dynamics (see also KINETICS and KINEMATICS). The term mechanics includes the action of forces on all bodies, whether solid, liquid, or gaseous. It is sometimes, however, and formerly was often, used distinctively of solid bodies only. The mechanics of liquid bodies is called also hydrostatics or hydrodynamics, according as the laws of rest or of motion are considered. The mechanics of gaseous bodies is called also pneumatics. The mechanics of fluids in motion with special reference to the methods of obtaining from them useful results constitutes hydraulics.

mech'a·nism (mĕk'ə-nĭz'm), n. [Cf. F. mécanisme, L. mechanisma. See MECHANIC, a.] 1. The arrangement or relation of the parts of a machine; the parts of a machine, taken collectively; the arrangement or relation of the parts of anything as adapted to produce an effect; as, the mechanism of a watch; the mechanism of a sewing machine.
2. Mechanical operation or action.

He acknowledges nothing besides matter and motion; so that all must be performed either by mechanism or accident. Bentley.

It remains to mention briefly the ideas of time, and thereby are able to represent motion as a length, and when we further erect the abstractions force and mass as correlative points of view from which motion is regarded as affecting bodies, we have all the organa of what may be called pure mechanism, or abstract constructive science, — a complete and elaborate system, founded ultimately on the combination of three abstractions, space, time, and matter. B. Bosanquet.

3. Kinematics. A kinematic chain with one link fixed relatively to the earth or some such standard, constituting the ideal machine, but considered only with regard to relative movements.

mech'a·nist (mĕk'ə-nĭst), n. 1. A maker of machines; one skilled in mechanics. Now Rare.
2. One who regards the phenomena of nature as the effects of forces merely mechanical.

mech'a·nis'tic (-nĭs'tĭk), a. Pertaining to mechanists; as, mechanistic materialism.

Meis'ter, Wil'helm (vĭl'hĕlm mīs'tĕr). [G.] The warm-hearted, impulsive hero of Goethe's "Wilhelm Meister's Apprenticeship" and "Wilhelm Meister's Travels," which together reveal the hero's mental and moral ripening. Meister is a favorite with women, and his susceptible nature often leads him too hastily into binding relations. He is emotional, speculative, and critical, ever striving for the harmonious development of his mind, and with exalted ideas of reforming the German stage. His love troubles finally end in a permanent attachment, and he finds happiness in a life of useful activity. The character is in large part a portrayal of the author's own development.

Meis'ter-sing'er (mis'tĕr-sĭng'ĕr ; -zĭng'ĕr), n. sing. & pl. [G.] A member of one of certain guilds, chiefly of workingmen, established between about 1300 and 1500 in Mainz, Nuremberg, and other German cities, for the cultivation of poetry and music. They were distinguished, on the one hand, from their predecessors, the usually aristocratic Minnesingers, and, on the other, from the minstrel singers of folk song. Their work, called Meistergesang, was generally a lyric setting of a Biblical or other subject, sung to the harp, etc. It was full of technicalities, formulated in a system called Tabulatur (which see). Candidates for admission to the guild had to submit a song to four judges or "markers," and usually passed through four preparatory degrees, Schüler, Schulfreund, Dichter, and Sänger (lit., scholar, school friend, poet, and singer), before attaining that of Meister (lit., master). Their pedantry is satirized (as applying to his critics) by Wagner in "Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg."

6. A melancholy or mournful writing, as a poem. Obs.

Syn. — Despondency, sorrow, mournfulness, depression, low spirits, hypochondria. — MELANCHOLY, SADNESS, DEJECTION, GLOOM. SADNESS is the general term for depression of spirits, of whatever degree ; MELANCHOLY, in modern usage, is (esp.) settled depression ; the word often suggests little more than pensive, sometimes pleasing, sadness ; as, "a thousand memories . . . unspeakable for sadness" (Tennyson) ; "We never do anything consciously for the last time . . . without sadness of heart" (De Quincey) ; "a feeling of sadness and longing, that is not akin to pain" (Longfellow) ; " Mine . . . is a white melancholy, . . . which, though it seldom laughs or dances, . . . yet is a good easy sort of a state. . . . But there is another sort, black indeed, which . . . believes, nay is sure of everything that is unlikely, so it be but frightful, and . . . excludes and shuts its eyes to the most possible hopes" (T. Gray) ; "the grace of forest charms decayed, and pastoral melancholy" (Wordsworth) : "Mellow, melancholy, yet not mournful, the tone seemed to gush up out of the deep well of her heart" (Hawthorne). DEJECTION suggests esp. the mood of one who is downcast, discouraged, or dispirited ; GLOOM is profound despondency or heaviness of spirits ; as, "As high as we have mounted in delight, in our dejection do we sink as low" (Wordsworth) ; "Childhood is not easily dejected" (Johnson) ; "a sullen gloom" (Burke) ; "Miss Brown looked . . . depressed almost to gloom" (Mrs. Gaskell) ; "a gloomy gazer on the world to which I have little relation" (Johnson). See DESPONDENCY, SORROW, MISERY, DISTRESS, TEDIUM, PENSIVE.

memorial arch, a monumental structure pierced by an arched passageway, which is often flanked by smaller arches and surmounted by an architrave and attic. The type had its origin among the Romans of antiquity: it supported much adornment by sculptured figures, inscriptions, and columns, and commemorated a notable victory, person, or event. Among Roman arches the best known are that of Titus on the Via Sacra (Rome), with reliefs exhibiting the plunder of Jerusalem; of Trajan (at Benevento), dedicated in 114, having a single arch and illustrating in reliefs Trajan's life and Dacian triumphs; of Septimius Severus, built by the senate, in 205, in the Forum, to honor the emperor and his two sons, whose statues in a six-horse car originally surmounted it; and of Constantine, spanning the Via Triumphalis near the Colosseum, built by that emperor in 311 to celebrate his victory over Maxentius. Modern memorial arches of note are: the Arc du Carrousel ("of the tilting yard"), near the Tuileries, Paris, built by Napoleon I. to commemorate his victories of 1805–6; the Arc de l'Étoile ("of the star"), heading the Champs Élysées, the largest existing arch, begun by Napoleon in 1806, but not finished until 1836. — M. Day, a day, May 30, appointed for commemorating, by decorating their graves with flowers, by patriotic exercises, etc., the dead soldiers and sailors who served in the Civil War (1861–65) in the United States; Decoration Day. It is a legal holiday in most of the States. In the Southern States, the Confederate Memorial Day is: May 30 in Virginia; April 26 in Alabama, Florida, Georgia, and Mississippi; May 10 in North Carolina and South Carolina; the second Friday in May in Tennessee; June 3 in Louisiana.

4. A memorandum; a note. Obs. or Law.

5. A record or memoir; pl., memoirs. Now Rare.

6. Diplomacy. Any of various informal state papers presented by the ambassador of one state to the representative of another in negotiation or sent by the executive of a state to its own representative abroad.

7. A statement of facts, addressed to the government, or to some branch of it, or to a society, etc., often accompanied with a petition or remonstrance.

me-mo'ri-al-ist, n. 1. One who writes or signs a memorial.

2. A writer of memorials, or memoirs.

me-mo'ri-al-ize (mē-mō'rĭ-ăl-īz; 201), v. t.; -IZED (-īzd); -IZ'ING (-īz'ĭng). 1. To address or petition by a memorial; to present a memorial to; as, to memorialize Congress.

2. To commemorate.

— me-mo'ri-al-i-za'tion (-ĭ-zā'shŭn; -ī-zā'shŭn), n. — me-mo'ri-al-iz'er (-īz'ẽr), n.

‖ me-mor'i-ter (mē-mŏr'ĭ-tẽr), adv. [L., fr. memor mindful. See MEMORABLE.] By, or from, memory; by heart.

mem'o-rize (mĕm'ō-rīz), v. t.; MEM'O-RIZED (-rīzd); MEM'O-RIZ'ING (-rīz'ĭng). [See MEMORY.] 1. To cause to be remembered; to make memorable; also, to preserve the memory of in writing; to record. Obs. or R.

2. To commit to memory; to learn by heart.

— mem'o-ri-za'tion (-rĭ-zā'shŭn; -rī-zā'shŭn), n. — mem'o-riz'er (mĕm'ō-rīz'ẽr), n.

mem'o-ry (mĕm'ō-rĭ), n.; pl. -RIES (-rĭz). [ME. memorie, OF. memoire, memorié, F. mémoire, L. memoria, fr. memor mindful; prob. akin to Gr. μέμερος anxious, μέριμνα thought, solicitude, μάρτυς a witness, Skr. smṛ to remember, and perh. to L. mora delay. Cf. MARTYR, MEMOIR, REMEMBER.] 1. The mental reproduction of impressions or thoughts previously entertained and the recognition of them as belonging to previous experience. Psychologists discriminate in memory: (1) a process of reproduction, which need not mean an exact replication, but only a recognizable equivalent of the reproduced experience; (2) a process of recognition, comprising a consciousness of the familiarity of the experience and a reference of it to a definite past time or occasion. This reference to time is sometimes discriminated, as localization, from mere recognition. Some treat retention as a memory process; and, indeed, this has been treated as in a broad sense the whole of memory, but it finds little or no place in the modern functional interpretation of consciousness.

2. The general capacity or function of mentally reproducing and recognizing previous experiences; in the older psychology, the faculty of memory. See FACULTY.

Memory is the purveyor of reason. Rambler.

3. The sum total of a mind's actual or possible memory experiences; as, a richly stored memory; also, the reach and positiveness with which a person can remember; the strength and trustworthiness of one's power to reach and represent or to recall the past; as, an accurate memory.

4. The time within which past events can be or are remembered; as, within the memory of man. At the common law legal memory begins with the date of coronation of Richard I., in 1189; but proof of the existence of a certain state of facts for twenty years, not explained or controverted, is sufficient for a presumption of an immemorial custom or prescription. The common-law rule has been greatly modified by statute, as in England by the Prescription Act (2 & 3 Wm. IV., 1832), and in the States of the United States by various statutes. See TIME IMMEMORIAL.

5. Any particular memory experience; as, he was absorbed in his memories; also, the object of a memory; the thing or aggregate of things remembered; as, she was but a memory to him; hence, character, conduct, etc., as preserved in remembrance, history, or tradition; posthumous fame; as, the war became only a memory.

The memory of the just is blessed. Prov. x. 7.

6. Commemoration; remembrance; as, in memory of youth; also, Obs., a ceremony of commemoration; service for the dead.

7. A memorial. Obs. or Archaic.

These weeds are memories of those worser hours. Shak.

8. Eccl. = MEMORIA, 2.

Syn. — MEMORY, REMEMBRANCE, RECOLLECTION, REMINISCENCE. MEMORY, in ordinary usage, is the general term for the faculty by which past impressions are reproduced, or for the revived impressions themselves; as, "Her memory . . . went slipping back upon the golden days" (Tennyson); "The memory of a beautiful air, . . . as far as any remembrance remains of it, is the continued presence in our minds of a likeness of it, which its actual presence has left there" (J. H. Newman). In the pl. memory suggests esp. somewhat intimate or personal recollections; as, "memories of tranquil childhood" (Shelley); "A thousand memories rolled] upon him, unspeakable for sadness" (Tennyson). REMEMBRANCE (now somewhat rare) suggests esp. the state of being remembered or the act of keeping in mind; as, "had in remembrance always with delight" (Milton); "This to in remembrance of me" (Luke xxii. 19). RECOLLECTION often implies a conscious effort to recall; as, "Half a word fixed upon or near the spot, is worth a cartload of recollection" (T. Gray). REMINISCENCE (chiefly pl.) now suggests esp. the retrospective recalling of happenings, events, or experiences in which one has had part; as, "One brief sigh sufficed to carry off the entire burden of these dismal reminiscences" (Hawthorne); "The reminiscences [of my father] kindly contributed by his different friends" (H. Tennyson); "I believe that as we lose our powers of memory we may increase the power of reminiscence, that is, of recalling what we want in small quantities for a short time" (Jowett). Recollection (in the pl.) is frequently used in a sense parallel with that of reminiscence, but less intimate than the corresponding sense of memory (in the pl.); as, "You ask me to put down a few recollections of your father" (Lecky). See REMEMBER.

memory image. Psychol. A mental image merely reproducing past experience; also, such an image with recognition and localization in time; a sensuous memory.

4. To improve upon; to excel; to "beat." Now Colloq.

Syn. — MEND, AMEND, EMEND. To MEND, in ordinary usage, is to restore to soundness or integrity, esp. that which is broken or torn (as, to mend a tool, a coat); the word is also used in the more general sense of altering something for the better; as, "to mend my errors" (Dryden); "If we do not improve by practice, then nothing can mend us" (Cowper); "Mend, Strangford, mend thy morals and thy taste" (Byron). To AMEND is to better or improve, esp. by the removal of faults, blemishes, or errors; as, "if those men of parts who have been employed in vitiating the age, had endeavored to rectify and amend it" (Spectator); "My only studying time is still given to [my translation of] Homer, not to correction and amendment of [it], . . . but to writing notes" (Cowper). To EMEND is specifically to make or suggest a correction or improvement in a (presumably corrupt) text; as, to emend a doubtful reading in Shakespeare; "'Pulpiter' can hardly be called an emendation; there is no obscurity which amounts to a defect. It is an improvement" (H. H. Furness). See CORRECT, IMPROVE, RENEW.

to mend one's fences, to settle differences among supporters and pave the way for a renomination; — said of one holding a political office. Polit. Cant, U. S. — to m. one's market, to better one's bargain or condition. — to m. one's pace, to go or travel faster.

mend (mĕnd), v. i. 1. To improve morally; to reform; — now chiefly in the proverb, "it is never too late to mend."

2. To grow better; to advance to a better state; to become improved; to become corrected or rectified.

3. To recover, or improve in, health; to be convalescent; to gain; to get better. Also, Chiefly Scot. & Dial., to heal, as a wound; to abate, as illness.

Syn. — Lying, deceit, untruth, falsehood. See FALSITY.

Men'de-lé'eff group (mĕn'dĕ-lā'yĕf; Russ. mĕn'dyĕ-lyā'yĕf). Preferably Men'de-lye'ev group (-yĕf). [After D. I. Mendelyeev, Russian chemist.] One of the groups into which the elements are classified in the periodic system. See PERIODIC LAW.

Men'de-lé'eff's law (-yĕfs). Preferably Men'de-lye'ev's law (-yĕfs). Chem. The periodic law. See under PERIODIC.

Men-de'li-an (mĕn-dē'lĭ-ăn), a. [See MENDEL'S LAW.] Biol. Pert. to Mendel, or to Mendel's law. — Men-de'li-an-ism (-Iz'm), Men'del-ism (mĕn'dĕl-), n.

Mendelian character, Biol., a character which obeys Mendel's law in regard to its hereditary transmission.

Men'del's law (mĕn'dĕlz). Heritable law governing the inheritance of many characters in animals and plants, discovered by Gregor J. Mendel (Austrian Augustinian abbot, 1822–84) in breeding experiments with peas. He showed that the height, color, and other characters depend on the presence of determinating factors behaving as units. In any given germ cell each of these is either present or absent. The following example (using letters as symbols of the determining factors and hence also of the individuals possessing them) shows the operation of the law: Tallness being due to a factor T, a tall plant, arising by the union in fertilization of two germ cells both bearing this factor, is TT; a dwarf, being without T, is tt. Crossing these, crossbreds, Tt, result (called generation F_1). In the formation of the germ cells of these crossbreds a process of segregation occurs such that germ cells, whether male or female, are produced of two kinds, T and t, in equal numbers. The T cells bear the factor "tallness," the t cells are devoid of it. T and t, being thus alternative, are called allelomorphs. The offspring, generation F_2, which arise from the chance union of these germ cells in pairs, according to the law of probability, are therefore on an average in the following proportions:

1 TT : 2 Tt : 1 tt ;

and thus plants (homozygotes) pure in tallness (TT) and dwarfness (tt), as well as crossbreds (heterozygotes) (Tt), are formed by the interbreeding of crossbreds. Frequently, as in this example, owing to what is called the dominance of a factor, the operation of Mendel's law may be complicated by the fact that when a dominant factor (as T) occurs with its allelomorph (as t), called recessive, in the crossbred Tt, the individual Tt is itself indistinguishable from the pure form TT. Generation F_1, containing only the Tt forms, consists entirely of dominants (tall plants) and generation F_2 consists of three dominants (2 Tt, 1 TT) to one dwarf (tt), which, displaying the feature suppressed in F_1, is called recessive. Such qualitative and numerical regularity has been proved to exist in regard to very diverse qualities or characters which compose living things, both wild and domesticated, such as colors of flowers, of hair or eyes, patterns, structure, chemical composition, and power of resisting certain diseases. The diversity of forms produced in crossbreeding by horticulturists and fanciers generally results from a process of analytical variation or recombination of the factors composing the parental types. Purity of type consequently acquires a specific meaning. An individual is pure (homozygous) in respect of a given character when it results from the union of two sexual cells both bearing that character, or both without it.

men'di-can-cy (mĕn'dĭ-kăn-sĭ), n. Condition of being mendicant; beggary; begging.

men'di-cant (-kănt), a. [L. mendicans, -antis, p. pr. of mendicare to beg, fr. mendicus beggar, indigent.] Practicing beggary; begging; living on alms; as, mendicant friars; also, characteristic of a beggar or beggary.

‖ me'ne, me'ne, te'kel, u-phar'sin (mē'nē, mē'nē, tē'kĕl, ū-fär'sĭn). [Aramaic.] Bib. The writing which appeared on the wall, at the time of Belshazzar's feast, interpreted by Daniel to foretell the destruction of Belshazzar and his kingdom. In the margin of the Revised Version these words are translated, "numbered, numbered, weighed, and divisions," but other meanings have been suggested by Bible critics. Daniel v. 25. See DANIEL, n., 2.

men-ha'den (mĕn-hā'dĕn), n. [Of Amer. Indian origin; cf. Narraganset munnawhatteaŭg, prop., fertilizer, the fish being used as manure for cornfields.] A marine clupeoid fish (Brevoortia tyrannis) having a large head, deep compressed body, toothless jaws, closely imbricated, bluish silvery scales, and attaining a length of 12 to 16 inches.

Menhaden.

On the Atlantic coast of the United States it is by far the most abundant of fishes, occurring in enormous schools. It is of importance as food for other fishes, and, though little esteemed as food, scores of millions are annually taken and used for bait or converted into oil and fertilizer. Called also mossbunker, bony fish, and by many other names.

men'hi-dro'sis (mĕn'hĭ-drō'sĭs), n. [NL. See MENO-; HIDROSIS.] Med. Peridical excessive perspiration, sometimes with excretion of blood, accompanying or replacing menstruation.

me'ni-al (mē'nĭ-ăl; mēn'yăl; 7), a. [ME. meyneal, fr. meinie, meyne(e), mayne, household, OF. maisniée, maisnie, LL. (assumed) mansionata. See MANSION.] 1. Of or pertaining to one's household; domestic. Obs.

2. Belonging to a retinue or train of servants; serving.

Two menial dogs before their master pressed. Dryden

3. Pertaining or appropriate to servants, esp. domestic servants; servile; low; mean. "Menial offices." Swift.

Syn. — Sordid, degrading; abject, cringing, fawning, obsequious, sycophantic. — MENIAL, SERVILE, SLAVISH. MENIAL is now used derogatorily of services or offices which, it is implied, are sordid or degrading; as, "She was treated altogether as a menial servant. . . . She went below stairs, brushed his shoes, coat, etc., . . . and never emerged from the dismal Tartarus of the kitchen" (De Quincey); "Her ladyship was of humble, I have heard even menial, station originally" (Thackeray). SERVILE now carries as its chief implication that of mean or cringing submission; SLAVISH connotes utter abjectness, or excessively laborious toil; as, "mean, servile compliance" (Burns); "companions . . . either so servile as to foster pride, or so insolent as to inflame it" (M. Hewlett); "Fear took hold on me from head to foot — slavish superstitious fear" (Stevenson); "slavish harnessed toil" (Carlyle). Both servile and slavish are used of unduly close dependence upon an original or model; as, "It is the business of art to imitate nature, but not with a servile pencil" (Goldsmith); "close [translation], but not so close as to be servile" (Cowper); "He who slavishly adheres to rule displays pedantry" (P. Perry). See SERF, SERVITUDE, BASE, ORDINARY, HUMBLE.

They are herbaceous or woody climbers, with narcotic or poisonous properties.

3. Pertaining or appropriate to servants, esp. domestic servants; servile; low; mean. "Menial offices." Swift.

Syn. — Sordid, degrading; abject, cringing, fawning, obsequious, sycophantic. — MENIAL, SERVILE, SLAVISH. MENIAL is now used derogatorily of services or offices which, it is implied, are sordid or degrading; as, "She was treated altogether as a menial servant. . . . She went below stairs, brushed his shoes, coat, etc., . . . and never emerged from the dismal Tartarus of the kitchen" (De Quincey); "Her ladyship was of humble, I have heard even menial, station originally" (Thackeray). SERVILE now carries as its chief implication that of mean or cringing submission; SLAVISH connotes utter abjectness, or excessively laborious toil; as, "mean, servile compliance" (Burns); "companions . . . either so servile as to foster pride, or so insolent as to inflame it" (M. Hewlett); "Fear took hold on me from head to foot — slavish superstitious fear" (Stevenson); "slavish harnessed toil" (Carlyle). Both servile and slavish are used of unduly close dependence upon an original or model; as, "It is the business of art to imitate nature, but not with a servile pencil" (Goldsmith); "close [translation], but not so close as to be servile" (Cowper); "He who slavishly adheres to rule displays pedantry" (P. Perry). See SERF, SERVITUDE, BASE, ORDINARY, HUMBLE.

Men'non-ite (mĕn'ŏn-it), n. Eccl One of a small denomination of evangelical Protestant Christians, so called from Menno Simons (1492–1559) of Friesland, one of their leaders. Their confession of faith, which is that adopted by the Mennonites of Holland in 1632, contains the usual evangelical doctrines, and enjoins the practice of foot washing, the intermarriage only of members of the same faith, nonresistance of violence, the use of the ban, or excommunication, and forbids the taking of oaths. They reject infant baptism, accept no public offices except those connected with the management of schools, and their ministry (bishops or elders, ministers, and deacons) is chosen from the congregations. The following table gives the various branches of Mennonites in the United States.

Name.	Date; Founder.	Distinctive Features, etc.
Mennonite Church.	Claims ancient origin.	Largest body.
Bruederhoef M. C.	Jacob Huter (d. 1536).	Communistic; use of German language.

3. Designating, or pertaining to, a style or system of music. See phrase below.

mensurable music [L. musica mensurata], music measured according to a system of meter or rhythm; specif., a style of music originating about 1100, distinguished by a complicated notation of time values to make possible the union of simultaneous but independent voice parts. The notation included the notes called large, long, breve, semibreve, minim, and others, of which each had thrice the length of the next denomination in "perfect" time — so called out of reverence for the Trinity — and twice that of the next in "imperfect" time. Division of the large into longs was called major mode; of the long into breves, minor mode; of the breve into semibreves, time; of the semibreve into minims, prolation (added later, and sometimes confusingly called major or minor, instead of "perfect" or "imperfect," according to the triple or duple value of the semibreve). These values with their common symbols were thus:

Mode	Major	perfect	1 large = 3 longs
		imperfect	1 " = 2 "
	Minor	perfect	1 long = 3 breves
		imperfect	1 " = "
Time		perfect	1 breve = 3 semibreves
		imperfect	1 " = 2 "
Prolation		perfect or major	1 semibreve = 3 minims imperfect or minor	1 " = 2 " (no dot)

* The number of the bars showed the number of longs to the large; their length, the number of breves to the long.
† Placed within the sign for time.

The symbols could be used in combination as in Illust.: The normal time could be quickened by a shortening of notes by one third or one half, called diminution, and then restored by augmentation. It could also be modified variously by a scheme with fractional symbols, called proportion, and by a doubling of certain notes, called alteration. Change from "perfection" to "imperfection" was sometimes indicated by the color of the notes. The time values of slurred notes (ligatures) had a special treatment. See LIGATURE, 5 a, Cit. Mensurable music led to the development of counterpoint and of the simpler modern notation.

men'su-ral (mĕn'shŏŏ-răl), a. [L. mensuralis.] 1. Of or pertaining to measure.
2. Music. = MENSURABLE, 3.

men'su-ra'tion (mĕn'shŏŏ-rā'shŭn), n. [L. mensuratio.] 1. Act, process, or art, of measuring.
2. The branch of applied geometry concerned with finding the length of lines, areas of surfaces, and volumes of solids, from certain simple data of lines and angles.

men'su-ra'tion-al (-ăl), a. Of or pert. to mensuration.

men'su-ra-tive (-rā-tĭv), a. Measuring; adapted for measurement.

Ment (mĕnt), n. Egypt. Myth. An Egyptian hawk-headed deity, during the period of Theban supremacy the god of war, though perhaps orig. of nature's reproductive forces.

-ment (-mĕnt). [F. -ment, or L. -mentum.] A suffix forming nouns from verbs (orig. in words from the Latin or French, but now used as an independent formative with verbs of any origin) with meanings as follows: 1. Action (from the active verb senses); act or fact of doing (what the verbal root denotes); as, abridgment, act of abridging; — often implying process, continuance, manner, art, amount, or other modification, as of time or place; as in, development, the fact or process of developing from germs; a study of government, that is, of the method or art of governing; repeated embezzle*ments*; a cantonu*ment*, place where troops are cantoned.
2. State or quality (from passive and neutral verb sense, and from participial adj. senses); state, condition, or quality, of being (what the verb denotes); as in, amaze*ment*, state of being amazed; sometimes also with special implication, as of manner, time, place, etc.; as in, proud of his adorn*ment*; convenient arrange*ment*; they read on in spite of their bewilder*ments*.
3. Concrete result or thing (arising from causal association with the verb senses, often where the verb itself has not been adopted); as in, lost among the entanglements (objects that entangle); rent affords a yearly increment (resulting increase); fragments (pieces broken) of rock; an attachment (thing attached) to a bridle.

☞ The reference "See -MENT" is sometimes given as the only definition of a word ending in -ment, if its meaning can be readily gathered from the definitions of the suffix and the root word.

men'tal (mĕn'tăl), a. [L. mentum the chin.] Anat. & Zoöl. Of or pertaining to the chin, or median part of the lower jaw, or the mentum of an insect; genial. — n. A mental plate or scale (of a fish or reptile).
mental foramen, Anat., a foramen for the passage of blood vessels and a nerve on the outside of the lower jaw on each side near the chin. — m. prominence or process, Anat., the bony prominence at the front of the lower jaw forming the chin. It is well developed in man only.

men'tal, a. [L. mentalis, fr. mens, mentis, the mind; akin to E. mind: cf. F. mental. See MIND.] Of or pertaining to the mind; intellectual; as, mental faculties; mental operations, conditions, or exercise.

This eye shoots forth! Shak.

Syn. — MENTAL, INTELLECTUAL, INTELLIGENT. MENTAL is contrasted esp. with bodily; INTELLECTUAL, with emotional, moral, and the like; as, "He seemed scarcely to know whether it was through the mental or bodily eye that he beheld" (W. Pater); "It was only on her intellectual side that Elizabeth touched the England of her day. All its moral aspects were simply dead to her" (J. R. Green). Mental never applies to persons; intellectual may apply to either persons or qualities; as, mental arithmetic; "men who have the highest mental training" (M. Arnold); "a miracle of intellectual delicacy like Dr. Newman's" (id.); "intellectual and thoughtful minds" (J. H. Newman). As compared with intelligent, INTELLECTUAL implies esp. interest in or devotion to pursuits or studies which exercise the intellect; INTELLIGENT (which may apply to animals as well as to human beings) suggests rather native sagacity or quickness of perception (cf. SHREWD, SENSIBLE); as, "though unpretending to the name and honors of a literary woman, I shall presume to call her (what many literary women are not) an intellectual woman" (De Quincey); an intelligent pupil, an intelligent spaniel, intelligent comprehension. See MIND.

men-tal'i-ty (mĕn-tăl'ĭ-tĭ), n. 1. Quality or state of mind; mental endowment or acumen; mental power. 2. Mind considered as a characteristic; as, the mentality of the lower animals.

men'tal-ly (mĕn'tăl-ĭ), adv. In the mind; in thought or meditation; intellectually; in idea.

men-ta'tion (mĕn-tā'shŭn), n. [L. mens, mentis, mind + -ation.] Mental process or function. Cf. CEREBRATION.

Men'tha (mĕn'thă), n. [L. See MINT the plant.] Bot. A large and widely distributed genus of herbs, the true mints, typifying the family Menthaceæ. They have small pink or white verticillate flowers, the corolla nearly regular, the four stamens equal. M. piperita is the peppermint; M. spicata is the spearmint.

Men-tha'ce-æ (mĕn-thā'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL.] Bot. A family of herbs, shrubs, or rarely trees (order Polemoniales), the mint family, characterized especially by the 4-lobed ovary, which becomes four 1-seeded nutlets in fruit. They are all aromatic and fragrant, and many genera, as Mentha, Hedeoma, etc., yield medicinal oils. Others, as Satureia, Ocimum, Salvia, etc., are cultivated as "herbs" for seasoning in cookery, and many genera, esp. Salvia and Coleus, have numerous ornamental species. The family is often called Labiatæ. — men-tha'ceous (-shŭs), a.

men'thane (mĕn'thān), n. [G. menthan; menthol + -an = E. -ane.] Org. Chem. Any of three isomeric saturated hydrocarbons, $C_{10}H_{20}$, distinguished as o-, m-, and p-, corresponding to the three cymenes, of which they are hydrogen addition products. Many natural terpene bodies are conveniently referred to paramenthane as the parent hydrocarbon, and a few to menthane. Derivatives of all three have been prepared synthetically. See TERPENE.

menthane group. Org. Chem. See under TERPENE.

men'thene (mĕn'thēn), n. [menthol + -ene.] Org. Chem. a A colorless oily hydrocarbon, $C_{10}H_{18}$, obtained from menthol by dehydration. It has an agreeable odor and cooling taste. b By extension, any hydrocarbon of the above formula which may be regarded as a hydrogen addition product of cymene, or as formed from menthene a: menthane by the abstraction of hydrogen. Of the many theoretically possible, only a few are known. Menthene proper is distinguished as Δ^3-p-menthene, and carvomenthene as Δ^1-p-menthene.

men'thol (-thōl; -thŏl), n. [Mentha + 1st -ol.] Chem. A white crystalline substance, $C_{10}H_{19}OH$, forming a principal constituent of oil of peppermint; — called also mint camphor or peppermint camphor. It has the odor and cooling taste of peppermint. It is an anodyne, and is used, esp. locally, in neuralgia and itching. Chemically, it is a secondary alcohol derived from p-menthane.

men'thone (-thōn), n. [menthol + 1st -one.] Org. Chem. A colorless liquid ketone, $C_{10}H_{18}O$, of mild mintlike odor, occurring in oil of peppermint and also prepared artificially, as by the oxidation of menthol. Its optical properties are variable, owing to the existence of several optically different modifications.

men-tif'er-ous (mĕn-tĭf'ẽr-ŭs), a. [L. mens, mentis, mind + -ferous.] Conveying mental impressions; telepathic.

men'tion (mĕn'shŭn), n. [ME. mencioun, F. mention, L. mentio, fr. the root of meminisse to remember. See MIND.] 1. Formerly, commemoration; now, a speaking or notice, esp. in a brief, incidental, or cursory manner; a specifying or specification, usually by name; casual introduction into speech or writing; naming, esp. incidentally; — usually with of and often in the phrase to make mention of.

I will make mention of thy righteousness. Ps lxxi. 16.

2. Short for honorable mention.

3. A statement; record; memorial inscription. Obs.

4. Indication; vestige; trace Obs.

men'tion, v. t.; MEN'TIONED (mĕn'shŭnd); MEN'TION-ING. [Cf. F. mentionner.] To make mention of; to refer to or discuss casually; to specify, esp. by name; to name.

I will mention the loving-kindnesses of the Lord. Is. lxiii. 7.

men'tion, v. i. To make mention; to speak; — usually with of. Obs.

men'to- (mĕn'tō-). A combining form from Latin mentum, meaning chin.

men'to-meck-e'il-an (-mĕk-ē'lĭ-ăn), a. [mento- + Meckelian.] Zoöl. Pertaining to or designating a cartilage bone or cartilage at the anterior extremity of the mandible of certain vertebrates, as the frogs. It is usually believed to represent the end of Meckel's cartilage. — n. The above bone or cartilage.

men'ton-nière', men'to-nière' (mĕn'tō-nyâr'), n. [OF. mentonnière, fr. menton chin, fr. L. mentum.] A piece of armor for the chin, esp. a piece added at a late date to the morion or similar headpiece and used only in battle.

men'tor (mĕn'tôr), n. [Gr. Μέντωρ, prop., counselor. Cf. MONITOR.] 1. [cap.] Gr. Myth. A friend to whom Odysseus, when setting out for Troy, intrusted the care of his house and the education of Telemachus.

2. [F.] Hence, a wise and faithful counselor or monitor.

3. Bot. A basal projection in certain orchids.

Ment-ze'li-a (mĕnt-zē'lĭ-ă), n. [NL., after Christian Mentzel (1622–1701), German physician and botanist.] Bot. A large genus of western American loasaceous plants. They are scabrous and bristly herbs or undershrubs with alternate leaves, yellow or white often showy flowers, and a 1-celled ovary with numerous ovules.

men'u (mĕn'ū; F. mē-nü'; see note below), n. [F., slender, thin, minute. See MINUTE little.] The details of a banquet or meal; a bill of fare; also, the dishes served.

☞ The pron. mā'nū is common in the United States, as if the French spelling were ménu; mē'nū is also heard.

Men'y-an-tha'ce-æ (mĕn'ĭ-ăn-thā'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL. See MENYANTHES.] Bot. A widely distributed family of aquatic or bog plants (order Gentianales) distinguished from the Gentianaceæ by the basal or alternate leaves and the valvate lobes of the corolla. There are 5 genera; Menyanthes and Limnanthemum are the most important. — men'y-an-tha'ceous (-shŭs), a.

Men'y-an'thes (-ăn'thēz), n. [NL., prob. irregularly formed fr. Gr. μηνιαίος monthly, or μήν month + ἄνθος flower.] Bot. A genus of bog plants consisting of a single species (M. trifoliata), the buck bean, of Asia and North America. See BUCK BEAN.

Meph'is-to-phe'le-an (mĕf'ĭs-tō-fē'lē-ăn; -t ŏ f'ē-l ē'ă n), Meph'is-to-phe'li-an (-tō-fē'lĭ-ăn; -fēl'yăn; 7), a. Pertaining to, or resembling, the devil Mephistopheles, esp. as portrayed in Goethe's "Faust;" devilish; crafty.

Meph'is-toph'e-les (mĕf'ĭs-tŏf'ē-lēz), n. [G.] One of the seven chief devils in the old demonology, the second of the fallen archangels, and the most powerful of the infernal legions after Satan. He figures in the old legend of Dr. Faustus as the familiar spirit of that magician. To modern readers he is chiefly known as the cold, scoffing, relentless fiend of Goethe's "Faust," and the attendant demon (Mephistophilis) in Marlowe's "Faustus."

me-phit'ic (mē-fĭt'ĭk), a. [L. mephiticus, fr. mephitis mephitis: cf. F. méphitique.] Of, pertaining to, or due to, mephitis; offensive to the smell; poisonous; noxious; as, mephitic exhalations, regions, odors.

mephitic air, Old Chem., carbon dioxide; — so called because of its deadly suffocating power.

me-phi'tis (mē-fī'tĭs), n. [L.] 1. A noxious, pestilential, or foul exhalation from the earth; also, an offensive or poisonous smell from any source; a stench.

2. [cap.] Zoöl. A genus of mammals, containing the common skunks.

me-ral'gi-a (mē-răl'jĭ-ă), n. [NL.; Gr. μηρός thigh + -algia.] Med. Pain in the thigh, esp. of a neuralgic kind.

mer'a-line (mĕr'ă-lĭn), n. A striped woolen fabric for dresses and cloaks.

mer'can-tile (mûr'kăn-tĭl; -tīl; 277), a. [F. mercantile, It. mercantile, fr. L. mercans, -antis, p. pr. of mercari to traffic. See MERCHANT.] 1. Of or pertaining to merchants, or the business of merchants; characteristic of, or befitting, a merchant; having to do with, or engaged in, trade, or the buying and selling of commodities; commercial.

The expedition of the Argonauts was partly mercantile, partly military. Arbuthnot.

2. Econ. Of or pertaining to the mercantile system (see below); as, the mercantile school, doctrine, theory, etc.

Syn. — See COMMERCIAL.

mercantile agency. a Law. Agency of a mercantile agent (in sense a). b An establishment or institution which collects information as to character, responsibility, credit, reputation, etc., of merchants or others doing business, and furnishes such information to others for a subscription price; a commercial agency. Such an establishment is not properly speaking the agent of its subscribers in the prosecution of its business. — m. agent. a One who is the agent of another for the conduct of mercantile transactions; as defined by the British Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45), one "who, in the customary course of his business as agent, has authority either to sell goods, or to consign goods for the purpose of sale, or to buy goods, or to raise money on the security of goods." This is the usual meaning of the term as used in legal writings. b A person or persons engaged in conducting a mercantile agency (in sense b). — m. law, the laws that deal with, or have grown out of, the usages and customs of merchants or business people or their relations to each other. The term is of indefinite significance, including generally, however, the law of partnership, joint-stock companies, agency, negotiable paper, contracts with carriers, insurance, sale, bottomry and respondentia, debt, guaranty, stoppage in transit, lien, bankruptcy, and insolvency. Cf. LAW MERCHANT. — mercantile paper, negotiable paper given by merchants for goods bought or received on consignment. — m. system, Econ., the system of public economy (cf. POLITICAL ECONOMY, ECONOMICS) that developed in the states of Europe upon the centralization of power accompanying the decay of the feudal systems. It was broadly characterized by the fact that its policy in the governmental regulation of industries, trade, and commerce, esp. with foreign countries, was determined rather by national aims than local or individual interests, seeking to build up the national strength and prosperity by securing a favorable balance of trade (which see), the development of agriculture and manufactures, the creation of a merchant marine, and the establishment of foreign trading monopolies. Characteristic English legislation based on mercantile-system principles was that establishing the regulated companies (which see), the Navigation Laws, the Corn Laws, statutes establishing discriminating or protective tariff duties, etc. It was modified and largely superseded by the economic system of the physiocrats and the system of laissez faire.

Adam Smith makes the theory of the balance of trade . . . the central doctrine of the mercantile system. . . . But in the light of modern historical research it can scarcely be maintained that the mercantile system was merely the outcome of a failure to distinguish between wealth and money. W. A. S. Hewins.

mer'can-til-ism (mûr'kăn-tĭl-īz'm; -tĭl-ĭz'm), n. 1. The spirit, theory, or practice of mercantile pursuits; devotion to commercial enterprise; commercialism.

2. Econ. The theory or practice of the mercantile system.

mer'can-til-ist, n. One who favors or practices mercantilism. — mer'can-til-is'tic (-ĭs'tĭk), a.

mer-cap'tal (mĕr-kăp'tăl), n. [mercaptan + aldehyde.] Org. Chem. Any of a series of compounds of the general formula $RCH(SR')_2$, formed by the reaction of mercaptans with aldehydes, and analogous to the acetals; — called also thioacetal. They are, in general, oils of unpleasant odor.

mer-cap'tan (-tăn), n. [G., fr. LL. mercurium captans seizing mercury (captans, p. pr. of L. capture to seize): cf. F. mercaptan.] Org. Chem. Any of a series of compounds of the general formula RSH, analogous to the alcohols, but containing sulphur in place of oxygen, and hence called also thioalcohols, or sulphur alcohols; specif., ethyl mercaptan, C_2H_5SH, the first discovered and most important. The mercaptans are, in general, colorless liquids having a strong, repulsive, garlic odor, and are formed by the reaction of alkyl halides with hydrosulphides and in other ways. They are so called because the hydrogen of the SH group is easily replaced by mercury and other metals, forming compounds called mer-cap'tides (-tīdz; -tĭdz; 184), or mer-cap'tids (-tĭdz).

mer-cap'tol (-tōl; -tŏl), n. Org. Chem. Any of a series of compounds formed by the reaction of mercaptans with ketones; specif., the compound, $(CH_3)_2C(SC_2H_5)_2$, formed from mercaptan and acetone. They are analogous to the mercaptals and, like them, are liquids of unpleasant odor.

Mer'ca-to'ri-al (mûr'kă-tō'rĭ-ăl; 201), a. Of or pertaining to the geographer Mercator or his method of projection; as, Mercatorial bearings.

Mer-ca'tor's chart (mĕr-kā'tẽrz; mĕr-kă'tôrz). A chart constructed on the principle of Mercator's projection.

Mercator's projection. A method of map making in which the meridians are drawn parallel to each other, and the parallels of latitude are straight lines whose distance from each other increases with their distance from the equator, so that at all places the degrees of latitude and longitude have to each other the same ratio as on the sphere itself. This produces an apparent enlargement of the polar regions (as in the map under DATE LINE), but it is of great importance for navigational purposes, since a rhumb line in such a chart is always a straight line. Called also (inaccurately) cylindric projection, in one form of which (projection of the surface of a sphere from its center, on a cylinder tangent along the equator) a depiction similar in general is obtained on rolling the cylinder out upon a plane.

Mer'ce-da'ri-an (mûr'sē-dā'rĭ-ăn; 115), n. R. C. Ch. A member of an order (the Order of the Blessed Virgin Mary of Mercy [LL., de Mercede] for the Redemption of Captives) founded at Barcelona in 1218 or 1223 by Peter Nolasco, a French knight, as an order of priests and knights for the delivery of Christian captives in Mohammedan countries. It adopted the Augustinian rule, was confirmed by Gregory IX. in 1235, and later (1516) had extended to it by Leo X. all the privileges of mendicant orders, this being confirmed by Benedict XIII. (1725). Subsequently it was especially engaged in the Christianizing of Central and South America.

mer'ce-na-ry (mûr'sē-nă-rĭ), a. [L. mercenarius, fr. merces wages, reward. See MERCY.] 1. Acting merely for reward; serving, working, or done solely for pay; hireling; venal; moved by considerations of pay, profit, or self-interest; having pecuniary advantage as its object or aim; greedy of gain; sordid; selfish.

2. Serving for pay or wages; hired; hireling; — now only of soldiers serving in an army not of their own country. 3. Salaried; also, conducted, engaged in, or run for, the purpose of making money. Obs.

Syn. — MERCENARY, HIRELING, VENAL. MERCENARY in the sense of hired applies (without necessary opprobrium) only to soldiers; as, mercenary troops. That is mercenary, in ordinary usage, which is actuated by (usually sordid or self-seeking) considerations of profit or reward; as, "She had . . . nothing sordid or mercenary; in fact, she never thought of money" (G. Eliot); "a cold-hearted, vain woman . . . the determined supporter of everything mercenary and ambitious, provided it be only mercenary and ambitious enough" (Jane Austen). HIRELING applies to that which is (esp.) servilely sold, VENAL, to that which is (esp.) basely purchasable, for a dishonorable consideration; both words are terms of strong opprobrium; as, "a hireling scribbler or a hireling peer" (Pope); "prostituted muse and hireling bard" (Byron); "a vermin wriggling in the usurper's ear, bartering his venal wit for sums of gold" (Dryden); "All things are sold; the very light of heaven is venal" (Shelley). See VENDIBLE, HIRE.

mer'cer (mûr'sẽr), n. [F. mercier, fr. L. merx, mercis, wares. See MERCHANT.] a A dealer in textile fabrics, as silks or woolens. Eng. b A dealer in small wares. Rare.

mer'cer-ize (-īz), v. t.; -IZED (-īzd); -IZ'ING (-ĭz'ĭng). [From (John) Mercer (1791–1866), an English calico printer who introduced the process + -ize.] To treat (cotton fiber or fabrics) with a solution of caustic alkali. Such treatment causes the fiber to shrink in length and become stronger and more receptive of dyes. If the yarn or cloth is kept under tension during the process, it assumes a silky luster. — mer'cer-i-za'tion (-ĭ-zā'shŭn; -ĭ-zā'shŭn), n.

Mer'cers-burg the-ol'o-gy (mûr'sẽrz-bûrg). A system emanating from the theological seminary of the German Reformed Church at Mercersburg, Pa., esp. from Prof. John Williamson Nevin (1803–86). It advocated a Christo-centric theology and asserted that the church as the Body of Christ has passed through experiences similar to those of an individual.

2. Of or pert. to trade or commerce; commercial. Obs.

merchant adventurer pl. MERCHANTS ADVENTURERS or MERCHANT ADVENTURERS. 1. A merchant engaged in foreign commerce by the establishment of trading stations in, and the sending of ventures to, other countries; esp., a member of an association or company of such. Obs.

2. [cap.] Eng. Hist. Specif., pl., a famous chartered regulated trading company which operated from as early as the 14th century down to near the end of the 16th century, and whose principal business was the export of cloth, of which trade it had a monopoly. At the height of its prosperity it did an enormous business in the Netherlands, having as many as 50,000 employees there. Eventually its principal depot was established at Hamburg, and it became known as the Hamburg Company. It served as a model for the great foreign-trading companies of the 16th and 17th centuries. In 1555 a company or association of Merchants Adventurers was incorporated for the discovery of unknown lands, Sebastian Cabot being named governor for life.

mer'cur-am-mo'ni-um (mûr'kûr-ă-mō'nĭ-ŭm), n. [mercuric + ammonium.] Chem. A radical regarded as derived from ammonium by the substitution of mercury for hydrogen; specif., the radical NH_2Hg. Several series of mercurammonium compounds, or mercuramines, have been described, as NH_3HgX, NH_2HgX, $NHgX$, $(NH_3)_2HgX_2$, etc., X being a univalent acid radical. They are regarded by some as amides ($NH_2{\cdot}Hg{\cdot}Cl$, not $Hg{:}NH_2Cl$, etc.).

mer-cu'rĭ-al (mẽr-kū'rĭ-ăl), a. [L. mercurialis of or belonging to Mercury, fr. Mercurius Mercury: cf. F. mercuriel.] 1. [cap.] Of, pert. to, or characteristic of, the god Mercury. Now Rare.

2. [cap.] Of or pert. to the planet Mercury; specif., Astrol., born under, influenced by, or due to the influence of, it.

3. Having qualities supposed to come from being born under the planet Mercury, or fabled to belong to, or to be inspired by, the god Mercury, or likened to the properties of the metal mercury; — in various senses; as: swift; active; eloquent; clever; crafty; commercial; money-making; thievish; sprightly; fickle; volatile; changeable; as, a mercurial youth; a mercurial temperament.

The mercurial wand of commerce. J. Q. Adams.

4. Of or pert. to, containing, or consisting of, mercury; as, mercurial preparations, barometer. See MERCURY.

5. Med. Caused by, or exhibiting the effect of, the use of mercury; as, mercurial sore mouth.

mer-cu'rĭ-al, n. 1. A person born under Mercury or having mercurial qualities, as a sprightly, volatile, or thievish person. See MERCURIAL, a., 3. Obs.

2. Pharm. A preparation containing mercury.

3. The plant mercury, or Good King Henry. Obs.

mer-cu'rĭ-al-ism (-ĭz'm), n. [mercurial + -ism.] Med. The morbid condition produced by the excessive use of mercury, or by exposure to its fumes, as in mining or smelting.

mer-cu'rĭ-al-i-za'tion (-ĭ-zā'shŭn; -ĭ-zā'shŭn), n. Act of mercurializing, or state of being mercurialized.

mer-cu'rĭ-al-ize (mẽr-kū'rĭ-ăl-īz), v. t.; MER-CU'RI-AL-IZED (-īzd); MER-CU'RI-AL-IZ'ING (-ĭz'ĭng). 1. To make mercurial.

2. Med. To affect or treat with mercury.

3. Photog. To treat with mercury; to expose to the vapor of mercury. See DAGUERREOTYPE.

mer-cu'rĭ-al-ize, v. i. To be sprightly, fantastic, or capricious. Obs.

mer'cu-rĭ-am-mo'ni-um (mûr'kū-rĭ-ăm-mō'nĭ-ŭm), n. Chem. The univalent radical NH_2Hg; as, mercuri-ammonium chloride, NH_2HgCl. See WHITE PRECIPITATE a.

Mer-cu'rĭ-an (mẽr-kū'rĭ-ăn), a. a Of or pert. to the god or the planet Mercury. b [l. c.] = MERCURIAL, 3. Obs.

mer-cu'ric (-rĭk), a. Chem. Of, pert. to, or containing, mercury; — said specif. of compounds in which this element has a valence of two.

mercuric chloride, corrosive sublimate. — m. cyanide, a compound, $Hg(CN)_2$, obtained in the form of square prisms by dissolving mercuric oxide in hydrocyanic acid, and evaporating. When heated it decomposes into mercury and cyanogen. — m. iodide, a compound, HgI_2, occurring in two crystalline modifications, yellow rhombic and red octohedral. The red form is the stable one at ordinary temperatures, and is used as a brilliant but impermanent pigment under the name of pure scarlet or iodine scarlet. — mercuric nitrate, a compound obtained in the form of colorless crystals, $2Hg(NO_3)_2{\cdot}H_2O$, by dissolving mercury in hot nitric acid. There are also white basic mercuric nitrates. — m. oxide, a compound, HgO, formed as a heavy brilliant red crystalline powder by heating mercuric nitrate, by heating mercury in air, etc., and then called also red precipitate. A yellow variety (yellow precipitate) is obtained by precipitation methods. Both kinds are used in ointments for diseases of the skin and affections of the eyelids. — m. sulphide, a compound, HgS, occurring native as cinnabar, and obtained artificially as a black powder or as a scarlet powder (vermilion). — m. sulphocyanate or thiocyanate. See PHARAOH'S SERPENTS.

mer-cu'rĭ-fy (mẽr-kū'rĭ-fī), v. t.; -FIED (-fīd); -FY'ING (-fī'ĭng). [mercury + -fy.] a To obtain mercury from (ores), as by intense heat that expels the mercury in fumes, which are afterward condensed. b To combine or mingle mercury with; to impregnate with mercury; to mercurialize. — mer-cu'rĭ-fi-ca'tion (-fĭ-kā'shŭn), n.

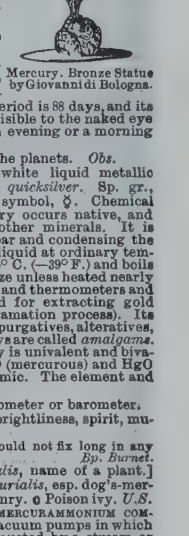
mer'cu-rous (mûr'kū-rŭs; mẽr-kū'rŭs; 277: the second accentuation is common in such phrases as mer-cu'rous ox'ide. Cf. SULPHUROUS), a. Chem. Of, pert. to, or derived from, mercury; containing mercury; — said specif. of compounds in which this element may be regarded as having a valence of one. — mercurous chloride, calomel. — m. oxide, a compound, Hg_2O, obtained as a brownish black powder by treating a mercurous salt solution with caustic alkali.

Mer'cu-ry (mûr'kū-rĭ), n.; pl. -RIES (-rĭz). [L. Mercurius, the god and the planet; akin to merx wares: cf. F. Mercure. Cf. MERCHANT.] 1. Rom. Relig. A Latin god of commerce and gain whose cult was derived from that of the Greek Hermes, and to whom, accordingly, the other characteristics of Hermes, as herald or messenger of the gods, conductor of souls to the lower world, and god of eloquence, were ascribed by the Latin poets. His worship was introduced into Rome, from southern Italy, as early as 495 B. C. Cf. DI.



Mercury. Bronze Statue by Giovanni di Bologna.

2. A statue or image of Mercury; specif., a herm.

3. [l. c.] A carrier of tidings; a bearer of news; a messenger; a guide; hence, also, a newspaper (now chiefly [cap.] in titles).

There will always be in society certain persons who are mercuries of its approbation. Emerson.

4. [l. c.] A nimble or clever person; also, a skillful thief. Obs.

5. A hawker of pamphlets or the like. Obs.

6. Astron. A planet of the solar system, being the nearest known one to the sun, from which its mean distance is about 36,000,000 miles. Its period is 88 days, and its diameter about 3,000 miles. It is visible to the naked eye only for a few days at a time as an evening or a morning star. Symbol, ☿.

7. Her. Purpure, in blazoning by the planets. Obs.

8. [l. c.] Chem. A heavy silver-white liquid metallic element; — called also, popularly, quicksilver. Sp. gr., 13.54. At. wt., 200.6. Alchemical symbol, ☿. Chemical symbol, Hg (hydrargyrum). Mercury occurs native, and in cinnabar, calomel, and a few other minerals. It is chiefly prepared by roasting cinnabar and condensing the vapors. It is the only metal that is liquid at ordinary temperatures. Mercury freezes at −39.5° C. (−39° F.) and boils at 357° C. (675° F.). It does not oxidize unless heated nearly to boiling. It is used in barometers and thermometers and for other scientific purposes, and for extracting gold and silver from their ores (amalgamation process). Its compounds are used in medicine as purgatives, alteratives, and esp. as antisyphilitics. Its alloys are called amalgams. See AMALGAM. Chemically, mercury is univalent and bivalent, forming the basic oxides Hg_2O (mercurous) and HgO (mercuric). Its molecule is monatomic. The element and its compounds are poisonous.

9. [l. c.] The mercury in a thermometer or barometer.

10. [l. c.] Mercurial quality, as sprightliness, spirit, mutability, fickleness, etc. Obs.

He was so full of mercury that he could not fix long in any friendship, or to any design. Bp. Burnet.

mercury ammonium compounds. = MERCURAMMONIUM COMPOUNDS. — m. pump. Any of various vacuum pumps in which air or other gas is trapped and exhausted by a stream or broken stream of mercury. See GEISSLER PUMP, SPRENGEL PUMP.

Mer-cu'ti-o (mẽr-kū'shĭ-ō), n. In Shakespeare's "Romeo and Juliet," a witty, madcap gentleman, friend to Romeo. He is slain by Tybalt.

Syn. — Pity, compassion, gentleness, mildness, kindness, favor, indulgence, forbearance, tolerance. — MERCY, GRACE, CLEMENCY, LENITY, LENIENCY, CHARITY. MERCY is esp. kindness or compassion toward the suffering or condemned; GRACE (now somewhat archaic in this sense) is spontaneous favor to the guilty or undeserving; CLEMENCY is mildness esp. in the exercise of power; as, "What doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy?" (Mic. vi. 8); "Earthly power doth then show likest God's when mercy seasons justice" (Shak.); "There is a remnant according to the election of grace. . . . And if by grace, then is it no more of works: otherwise grace is no more grace" (Rom. xi. 5, 6); "If there be such failing in me, I might amend it by the grace of Heaven" (Tennyson); a prince famous for his clemency, an appeal to a judge for clemency. LENITY is esp. mild or gentle, LENIENCY (opposed esp. to rigor, severity), easy or indulgent, treatment of faults or failings; as, "What makes robbery bold but too much lenity?" (Shak.); to look with leniency upon human folly. CHARITY, as here compared (see PHILANTHROPY), is broad and kindly tolerance; as, "Alas! for the rarity of Christian charity under the sun!" (Hood); "with malice toward none, with charity for all" (Lincoln); "To know the literature of another language . . . enlarges æsthetic charity" (Lowell); "[Oxford] seems to give a wide toleration and charity to the social intercourse of thinkers" (J. R. Green).
See PITY, HUMANE, FAVOR, GENTLE, EXCUSE.

at the mercy of, wholly in the power of; liable to any treatment whatever at the hands of. — M., Fathers or Priests of, R. C. Ch., members of a congregation founded by a French priest, Jean Baptiste Rauzan (1757–1847), chaplain of Louis XVIII., and approved by the Pope as the "Society of the Priests of Mercy" in 1834, whose members are devoted to mission preaching and charitable works. It was introduced into America in 1839.

mercy seat. Jewish Antiq. 1. The golden plate resting on the Ark on which the blood of sacrificial animals was sprinkled, as prescribed by the law for temple worship; — a translation of the Heb. kapporeth, Gr. ἱλαστήριον, in English Bible versions, on the belief that it was the resting place of God. The word means propitiatory thing, means of propitiation, and is applied to various things. Hence a better name for this object is the propitiatory.
2. Fig.: a The throne of God or Christ. b Propitiation; — said of Christ after 1 John ii. 2. Obs. or R.

mere (mēr), n. Also mar. [ME. mere, AS. mere mere, sea; akin to D. meer lake, OS. meri sea, OHG. meri, mari, G. meer, Icel. marr, Goth. marei, Russ. more, W. mor, Ir. & Gael. muir, L. mare. 2. Done, made, or exercised unassisted or independently of others; sole; as, mere motion (cf. EX MERO MOTU); mere will. Chiefly Law.
3. Being only or fully what it or one appears to be; nothing less than; entire; absolute; sheer; unqualified. Obs.
Then entered they the mere, main sea. Chapman.
4. Only this, and nothing else; nothing more than; such, and no more; simple; as, a mere child; a mere form.
From mere success nothing can be concluded. Atterbury.

Syn. — MERE, BARE are often employed with little or no distinction. But MERE is commonly used to emphasize the limitations of a thing, as if it were declared to be "simply what it is and nothing more"; BARE is stronger, and frequently suggests that the object to which it is applied just escapes falling short of what it actually is; as, mere civility (that is, civility and nothing more); bare civility (that is, civility that just escapes being incivility); a mere boy; to make a bare living; a mere majority signifies little; elected by a bare majority; "I do not mean by expression the mere choice of words, but the whole dress, fashion, and arrangement of a thought" (T. Gray); "Patriarch wits survived a thousand years . . . bare threescore is all even [length of fame] can boast" (Pope). See HARDLY, PURE.

-mere (-mēr). [Gr. μέρος part.] Zoöl. A combining form, meaning part, portion; as, blastomere, epimere.

mere'ly (mēr'lĬ), adv. 1. Purely; unmixedly; absolutely; entirely; quite; also, solely; in fact; actually. Obs.
2. Not otherwise than; simply; barely; only; as, he came merely to see and talk with his friends.

Syn. — Solely, simply, purely, barely, scarcely.

mere'stone', mear'stone' (mēr'stōn'), n. A stone designating a boundary; a landmark. Archaic or Dial.

mer'e-tri'cious (mĕr'ĕ-trĭsh'ŭs), a. [L. meretricius, fr. meretrix, -icis, a prostitute, lit., one who earns money, i. e., by prostitution, fr. merere to earn, gain. See MERIT.] 1. Of, pert. to, characteristic of, or being, a prostitute; having to do with harlots; as, meretricious traffic.
2. Alluring by false show; gaudily and deceitfully ornamental; tawdry; as, meretricious dress, style, composition.

Syn. — See GAUDY.

mer-gan'ser (mĕr-găn'sẽr), n. [NL., fr. L. mergus diver (bird, fr. mergere to dip, plunge) + anser goose; cf. Sp. mergánsar.] 1. Any of several fish-eating ducks constituting the subfamily Merginæ, having a slender bill, hooked at the end and beset with toothlike serrations, and the head usually crested. They are expert divers. Their flesh is poor. Mergus merganser of Europe and the very similar M. americanus of America are common large species. The male has a greenish black head and slight crest; the female, a reddish brown head. An allied form, the red-breasted merganser (M. serrator), is common to both continents. See HOODED MERGANSER, Illust., SMEW.
2. [cap.] Zoöl. Syn. of MERGUS (genus of merganser).

merge (mûrj), v. t.; MERGED (mûrjd); MERG'ING (mûr'jĭng). [L. mergere, mersum; akin to Skr. majj to sink under, to bathe. Cf. EMERGE, IMMERSE.] 1. To cause to be swallowed up; to immerse; sink; absorb.
To merge all natural . . . sentiment in inordinate vanity. Burke.
Whig and Tory were merged and swallowed up in the transcendent duties of patriots. De Quincey.
2. Law. To cause to be absorbed, sunk, or extinguished by merger (which see).

Syn. — See MINGLE.

merge, v. i. 1. To be sunk, swallowed up, or lost; to lose identity by absorption or immersion in something else.
Native irresolution had merged in stronger motives. I. Taylor.
2. Law. To be absorbed or extinguished by merger.

mer'gence (mûr'jĕns), n. A merging; state of being merged.

merg'er (mûr'jẽr), n. One that merges.

merg'er, n. [Formed on the analogy of AF. or OF. infin. forms used as nouns. See MERGE, v.] 1. Law. An absorption of one estate, or of one contract or interest, in another, or of a minor offense in a greater. At common law a merger takes place when a lesser estate and a greater one, or a higher security, obligation, or interest, and a lower one, become vested in one person in the same right without any intermediate estate, etc.; but in equity the two interests may be treated as separate so far as equitable interests demand. With reference to corporations merger is used to denote the vesting of the control of different corporations in a single one by the issue of stock of the controlling corporation in place of a majority of the stock of the others, and is distinguished from a consolidation, which in strictness implies that the consolidating companies dissolve, their property and business being transferred to a single company (cf. AMALGAMATION).
2. = MERGENCE.

-mer'ic (-mĕr'Ĭk). Combining form from Greek μέρος, part. See -MEROUS.

mer'i-carp (mĕr'Ĭ-kärp), n. [Gr. μέρος a part + καρπός fruit: cf. F. méricarpe.] Bot. One of the two carpels forming a cremocarp (which see).

me-rid'i-an (mē-rĭd'Ĭ-ăn), a. [ME. meridien, -an, OF. meridien, F. méridien, or L. meridianus pertaining to noon, fr. meridies noon, for older medidies; medius mid, middle + dies day. See MID; DIURNAL.] 1. Being at, or pert. to, midday; belonging to, or passing through, the highest point attained by a heavenly body in its diurnal course.
2. Pertaining to, or characteristic of, the highest point or culmination; as, meridian splendor.
3. Of the highest degree; consummate. Obs.
4. Of or pertaining to a meridian.
5. Southern; meridional. Rare.

meridian altitude, Astron., the arc of the meridian intercepted between a heavenly body at culmination and the nearest point of the horizon. It is the complement of zenith distance. — m. circle. See CIRCLE, n., 5. — m. instrument, Astron., any astronomical instrument having a telescope that rotates in a meridian plane. — m. mark, Astron., a fixed mark due north or south of a meridian instrument, to aid in adjusting or finding its azimuth; — called also mire. — m. passage, Astron., the passage of a heavenly body across an observer's meridian. — m. photometer, a photometer consisting essentially of a telescope with two object glasses, and prisms for changing the apparent brightness of an observed heavenly body, used for finding the magnitude of a star by comparison with the pole star. — m. ring, a ring marked as a sundial. — m. sailing, Navig., sailing north or south, as opposed to parallel sailing east or west.

me-rid'i-an, n. [See MERIDIAN, a.] 1. Midday; noon. Obs. or R. Hence: a A midday nap; a siesta. Obs. or Hist. b A midday drink or dram. Scot.
2. Of a star or the sun, its highest apparent point.
3. Hence: The highest point, as of success, prosperity, or the like; culmination, as the prime of a man's life.
4. Astron. a A great circle of the celestial sphere passing through its poles and the zenith of a given place. It is crossed by the center of the sun at local apparent noon. b Short for MERIDIAN INSTRUMENT.
5. Geog. a A great circle on the surface of the earth, passing through the poles and any given place; also, and now usually, the half of such a circle included between the poles. Its plane coincides with that of the astronomical meridian of the place. (See PRIME MERIDIAN.) b The representation of such a circle or half circle on a map or globe; any of a series of lines drawn at certain intervals due north and south, or in the direction of the poles. They are numbered according to the degrees of longitude; as, the 90th meridian east of Greenwich. c A graduated circle, as of brass, in which a globe is suspended and revolves.
6. Fig.: Special or distinctive locality, circumstances, capacities, or the like; grade; plane.
All other knowledge merely serves the concerns of this life, and is fitted to the meridian thereof. Sir M. Hale.
7. South. Obs.

me-rid'i-an'o-scope (mē-rĭd'Ĭ-ăn'ō-skōp), n. [meridian + -scope.] A form of solar compass adapted for geological surveying in localities in which the presence of iron ore deposits affects the magnetic needle.

me-rid'i-o-nal (mē-rĭd'Ĭ-ō-năl), a. [F. méridional, L. meridionalis, fr. meridies midday, south. See MERIDIAN.]
1. Of pertaining to, or situated in, the south; having a southern aspect; southern; southerly. Sir H. Wotton.
2. Of, pertaining to, or characteristic of, people living in the south, as of Europe, esp. France.
The meridional vivacity of his style. Dict. of Pol. Econ.
3. Of or pert. to the position of the sun at midday; hence, pert. to, or characteristic of, midday or noon. Obs. or R.
4. Of, pertaining to, like, or suggestive of, a meridian.

meridional difference of latitude, Navig., the difference of the meridional parts for any two latitudes. — m. distance, Navig., meridional difference of latitude; — erroneously so called. — m. part, Navig., the length of any small portion of a terrestrial meridian (expressed in minutes of the equator), and increased from its natural length more and more as the pole is approached, in accord with Mercator's projection. — m. projection, a projection of a sphere on a plane parallel to the meridian.

Me-rid'i-o-nal, n. One who lives in the south, as of Europe, esp. France.

me-rid'i-o-nal'i-ty (-năl'Ĭ-tĬ), n. Quality or state of being meridional or on the meridian; position in the south; aspect toward the south.

me-ringue' (mē-răng'; F. -răng'), n. [F.] Cookery. A delicate composition, chiefly of powdered sugar and the beaten whites of eggs, used as an icing on puddings, fruit, pies, etc., or made into small cakes and baked; also, a small cake made of this. — me-ringued' (mē-răngd'), a.

me-ri'no (mĕ-rē'nō), a. [Sp.; cf. Sp. merino moving from pasture to pasture, merino a royal judge and superintendent or inspector of sheep walks, LL. merinus, fr. majorinus, i. e., major villæ, fr. L. major greater. See MAYOR. Merino sheep are driven at certain seasons from one part of Spain to another, in large flocks, for pasturage.] 1. Designating, or pertaining to, a breed of fine-wooled white sheep originating in Spain and afterwards widely popular, esp. in America and Australia. The males have heavy spirally twisted horns; the ewes are hornless. In the better varieties the skin hangs in heavy folds, esp. about the breast, shoulders, and thighs. The breed excels all others in the weight and quality of its fleece, but does not rank high as a mutton producer.
2. Made of merino.

me-ri'no, n.; pl. MERINOS (-nōz). [Sp. See MERINO, a.] 1. A merino sheep.
2. A fine fabric made originally of merino wool, but later of fine wool mixed with cotton.
3. A fine woolen yarn used in hosiery, underwear, etc.

mer'is-mat'ic (mĕr'Ĭz-măt'Ĭk; mĕr'Ĭs-), a. [Gr. μέρισμα part, akin to μέρος part.] a Bot. Pertaining to, or consisting of, meristem; capable of growth, as meristem. b Zoöl. Dividing by the formation of internal partitions.

mer'i-ste'le (mĕr'Ĭ-stē'lē), n. [Gr. μερίς, or μέρος, part + stele.] Bot. One of the leaf bundles in a monostelic stem, as that of the higher ferns; — so called because it contains elements of all the tissues of the stele, of which it is a portion. — mer'i-ste'lic (-stē'lĬk), a.

mer'i-stem (mĕr'Ĭ-stĕm), n. [Gr. μερίζειν to divide.] Bot. Embryonic or undifferentiated tissue, the cells of which are capable of active division. The meristem of growing points and of embryonic rudiments is distinguished as promeristem, and the tissue developing from it as primary meristem. Permanent tissue may again become capable of growth, as in the case of interfascicular cambium, phellogen, etc.; it is then known as secondary meristem. This differs from primary meristem in that it retains the power of independent growth, giving rise on the one hand to permanent tissue, on the other to additional formative elements. See CAMBIUM.

It constitutes a family, Me-si'ti-dæ (-sĭt'ĭ-dē), and sometimes a suborder, Me-si'tes (-sī'tēz).

mes'i-tite (mĕs'ĭ-tīt). mes'i-tine (-tĭn), n. Also mesitine spar. [Gr. μεσίτης mediator.] Min. A carbonate of magnesium and iron, $2MgCO_3{\cdot}FeCO_3$, intermediate between magnesite and siderite.

mes'i-ton'ic (-tŏn'ĭk), a. Chem. Designating a crystalline ketonic acid, $CH_3COCH_2C(CH_3)_2{\cdot}CO_2H$, got by heating mesitylenic acid with hydrochloric acid and otherwise.

mes-sit'y-le-nate (mĕ-sĭt'ĭ-lē-artificially, as by distilling acetone with sulphuric acid. It is the symmetrical trimethyl derivative of benzene.

mes/i-ty-len'ic (mēs/ĭ-tĭ-lēn'ĭk), a. Chem. Pertaining to or designating a crystalline acid, $C_6H_3(CH_3)_2CO_2H$, formed by the oxidation of mesitylene.

mesityl oxide. Org. Chem. A volatile liquid ketone, $(CH_3)_2C{:}CHCOCH_3$, of a peppermint odor, obtained by the action of certain dehydrating agents on acetone.

mes-mer'ic (mĕz-mĕr'ĭk), a. Of, pertaining to, or induced by, mesmerism; hence, fascinating; irresistible. — mes-mer'i-cal-ly (-ĭ-kăl-ĭ), adv.

mes/mer-ism (mĕz'mĕr-ĭz'm; see note below), n. [After F. A. Mesmer, who first brought it into notice at Vienna, about 1775: cf. F. mesmérisme.] Hypnotism (which see); — an early name.

☞ All the dictionaries agree in giving z in the pron. of the first syllable of this word and its derivatives, like the French. The name Mesmer is properly pron'd mĕs'mĕr.

mes/mer-ist, n. A hypnotist; also, an adherent of Mesmer's theories. Obsolete.

mes/mer-ize (mĕz'mĕr-ĭz), v. t. & i. ; MES/MER-IZED (-ĭzd); MES/MER-IZ/ING (-ĭz'ĭng). To hypnotize. — mes/mer-i-za'tion (-ĭ-zā'shŭn ; -ĭ-zā'shĭn), n. Obsolete.

mesn'al-ty (mēn'ăl-tĭ), n. [Of AF. origin. See MESNE, a.] Law. Estate or condition of a mesne lord.

mesne (mēn), a. [Cf. MEAN intermediate.] Law. Middle; intervening; specif.: a In mesne lord, designating a lord who holds land of a superior, being tenant to the superior, but lord, or superior, to his own tenant. b Intermediate in time of occurrence or performance; as, a mesne encumbrance, or one between two others so as to be junior to one and senior to the other. — mesne process. See PROCESS. — m. profits, profits of premises during the time the owner has been wrongfully kept out of the possession of his estate.

mes'o- (mĕs'ō-), mes- (mĕs-). [Gr. μέσος in the middle.] Combining form denoting in the middle, intermediate; as: Org. Chem. a Denoting an optical isomer whose molecule intimately is assumed to be due to internal compensation. b Designating certain anthracene derivatives. See ANTHRACENE.

mes/o-ben'thos (-bĕn'thŏs), n. [NL.; meso- + benthos.] Biol. The fauna and flora of the sea bottom, extending below the epibenthos to a depth of about 500 fathoms.

mes'o-blast (mĕs'ō-blăst), n. [meso- + -blast.] Embryol. & Zoöl. The middle germ layer of the embryo; the mesoderm. See GERM LAYER, MESODERM.

mes/o-blas'tic (-blăs'tĭk), a. Embryol. Relating to, or derived from, the mesoblast. — mesoblastic somite, Embryol., a primitive segment. See under PRIMITIVE.

mes/o-bron-chi'tis (-brŏŋ-kī'tĭs), n. [NL.; meso- + bronchitis.] Med. Inflammation of the middle coat of the bronchial tubes.

mes/o-cæ'cum (-sē'kŭm), n. [NL.; meso- + cæcum.] Anat. The fold of peritoneum attached to the cæcum. — mes/o-cæ'cal (-kăl), a.

mes/o-carp (mĕs'ō-kärp), n. [meso- + -carp.] Bot. The middle layer of a pericarp consisting of three distinct or dissimilar layers. Cf. EPICARP, ENDOCARP.

mes/o-ce-phal'ic (-sĕ-făl'ĭk), a. [meso- + cephalic.] Anat. a Pertaining to the middle region of the head. b Having the cranial cavity of medium capacity; neither megacephalic nor microcephalic. c Mesaticephalic. — mes/o-ceph'a-ly (-sĕf'ă-lĭ), mes/o-ceph'a-lism (-lĭz'm), n.

mes/o-chro'ic (-krō'ĭk), a. [Gr. μεσόχροος of mixed complexion; μέσος middle + χρώς, χροός, complexion.] Eth-nol. Having a complexion intermediate between light and dark, as the Mongolian race.

mes/o-cœle (mĕs'ō-sēl), mes/o-cœ'li-an (-sē'lĭ-ăn), n. [NL. mesocoelia. See MESO-; CŒLIA.] Anat. The ventricle of the mesencephalon; the iter. — mes/o-cœ'li-an (-ăn), a.

mes/o-co'lon (-kō'lŏn), n. [NL., fr. Gr. μεσόκωλον ; μέσος middle + κῶλον colon.] Anat. A fold of peritoneum, or mesentery, joined to the colon. — mes/o-col'ic (-kŏl'ĭk), a.

mes/o-cor'a-coid (-kŏr'ă-koid), a. [meso- + coracoid.] Zoöl. Designating, or pertaining to, a median element of the coracoid arch in certain of the less specialized teleost fishes, as the Nematognathi, Plectospondyli, and Isospondyli. It is situated transversely between the hypercoracoid and the hypocoracoid, and bridges over the interval between them, hence often called the mesocoracoid arch. It is called also precoracoid. — n. A mesocoracoid bone.

mes/o-cy'cle (mĕs'ō-sī'k'l), n. [meso- + cycle.] Bot. A layer of parenchyma separating the xylem and phloëm in a monostelic stem. With the pericycle it forms the so-called conjunctive tissue of the stele. Where internal phloëm is present there may also be an internal pericycle.

mes/ode (mĕs'ōd), n. [Gr. μεσῳδός. See MESO-, ODE.] Gr. Pros. A portion of a choral ode coming between a strophe and its antistrophe, and having no corresponding portion.

mes/o-derm (mĕs'ō-dûrm), n. [meso- + -derm.] Embryol. & Zoöl. The middle germ layer; the mesoblast; also, the tissues which are subsequently developed from it. When used of embryonic tissues mesoderm is strictly synonymous with mesoblast. The two terms are often also used interchangeably of adult tissues. See GERM LAYER; cf. MESOGLŒA. — mes/o-der'mal (-dûr'măl), a.

mes/o-gas'tric (-găs'trĭk), a. [meso- + gastric.] Anat. & Embryol. Of or pert. to the mesogastrium. b Zoöl. Of or pert. to the middle gastric lobe of the carapace of a crab.

mes/o-gas'tri-um (-trĭ-ŭm), n. [NL.; meso- + Gr. γαστήρ belly.] a Embryol. A fold of peritoneum connecting the stomach with the dorsal wall of the abdominal cavity. b Anat. The umbilical region.

mes/o-glœ'a (mĕs'ō-glē'ă), n. [NL.; meso- + Gr. γλοιός a glutinous substance.] Zoöl. In sponges and cœlenterates, a gelatinous substance, often containing cells and skeletal structures, intervening between the endoderm and ectoderm and becoming very thick in ctenophores and medusæ; — often called mesoderm, esp. by those who regard it as truly representing that layer. — mes/o-glœ'al (-ăl), a.

mes/og-nath'ic (mĕs/ŏg-năth'ĭk) } a. [meso- + -gna- mes-og'na-thous (mĕs-ŏg'nă-thŭs) } thous.] Craniom. Having the jaws slightly projecting; having a medium gnathic index (which see). — mes-og'na-thism (mĕs-ŏg'nă-thĭz'm), mes-og'na-thy (-thĭ), n.

Mes/o-hip'pus (mĕs'ō-hĭp'ŭs), n. [NL.; meso- + Gr. ἵππος a horse.] Paleon. A genus of extinct horselike mammals about as large as sheep, from the Lower Miocene of North America. They had three toes on the fore feet, with a splint bone representing the fourth, and three on the hind feet.

mes/o-labe (mĕs'ō-lāb), n. [L. mesolabium, Gr. μεσόλαβος ; μέσος middle + λαμβάνειν to take.] An instrument of the ancients for finding two mean proportionals between two given lines, required in solving the problem of the duplication of the cube. It was also used for extracting roots geometrically.

mes/o-neph'ros (-nĕf'rŏs), n. [NL. ; meso- + Gr. νεφρός kidney.] Embryol. One of the middle of the three pairs of embryonic renal organs of typical vertebrates; the Wolffian body. See KIDNEY. — mes/o-neph'ric (-rĭk), a.

mes/o-no'tum (-nō'tŭm), n. [NL.; meso- + Gr. νῶτον the back.] Zoöl. The dorsal portion of the mesothorax of insects. — mes/o-no'tal (-tăl), a.

mes'o-phyll (mĕs'ō-fĭl), n. Also mes'o-phyl. [meso- + -phyll.] Bot. The green parenchyma between the epidermal layers of a foliage leaf; the internal ground tissue of the blade or lamina. It is usually differentiated into palisade parenchyma and spongy parenchyma. See LEAF.

mes'o-phyte (-fīt), n. [meso- + -phyte.] Phytogeog. A plant that grows under medium or normal conditions of atmospheric and soil moisture, as contrasted with desert plants (xerophytes) and aquatics (hydrophytes). The great majority of plants growing in temperate regions are mesophytes. — mes/o-phyt'ic (-fĭt'ĭk), a.

mes'o-plast (mĕs'ō-plăst), n. [meso- + -plast.] Biol. The nucleus of a cell. — mes/o-plas'tic (-plăs'tĭk), a.

mes/o-po'dĭ-al (-pō'dĭ-ăl), a. Zoöl. Of or pertaining to the mesopodialia, the parts of the limbs to which they belong, or the mesopodium of a mollusk.

mes/o-po'dĭ-a'le (-ā'lē), n.; pl. -ALIA (-ā'lĭ-ă). [NL.; meso- + Gr. πόδιον, dim. of πούς, ποδός, foot.] Zoöl. Any one of the bones of either the carpus or tarsus.

mes/o-po'dĭ-um (-pō'dĭ-ŭm), n.; L. pl. -DIA (-ă). [NL. See MESOPODIALE.] a Zoöl. The middle portion of the foot of a mollusk; cf. PROPODIUM. b Bot. The intermediate portion of the axis of a phyllopodium, which develops into the leaf petiole. Cf. HYPOPODIUM, EPIPODIUM. — mes/o-po'di-al (-ăl), a.

mes/o-po-ta'mĭ-a (mĕs/ō-pō-tā'mĭ-ă), n. [Gr. μεσοποταμία (sc. χώρα) the country between two rivers; μέσος middle + ποταμός river.] A region, district, or country lying between rivers. Rare.

Mes/o-po-ta'mĭ-an (-ăn), a. Of or pertaining to Mesopotamia, the country between the Tigris and Euphrates rivers, or, in a narrower sense, the northern part of this country, anciently bounded on the south by Babylonia and on the north by Armenia. — n. A native of Mesopotamia.

mes/op-ter-yg'i-um (mĕs-ŏp'tĕr-ĭj'ĭ-ŭm), n. [NL. ; meso- + Gr. πτερύγιον a fin.] Zoöl. The middle one of the three principal basal cartilages which directly support the fin rays in the pectoral fins of certain fishes, as the sharks and rays. — mes-op'ter-yg'i-al (-tĕr-ĭj'ĭ-ăl), a.

mes/op-ter'y-goid (mĕs/ŏp-tĕr'ĭ-goid), a. [meso- + pterygoid.] Zoöl. Designating, or pertaining to: a In birds, a part or a process of the pterygoid bone articulating with the palatine bone of the same side or with the basipterygoid process of the sphenoid, or with both. b In teleost fishes, a distinct pterygoid element, articulating in front with the palatine, behind with the metapterygoid, and laterally with the pterygoid. Also called entopterygoid and internal pterygoid. — n. A mesopterygoid bone or process.

mes/or-rhin'i-an, mes/o-rhin'i-an (mĕs/ō-rĭn'ĭ-ăn), a. [meso- + Gr. ῥίς, ῥινός, nose.] Anthropom. Having a somewhat broad but long nose, or an intermediate nasal index (which see). — n. A mesorrhinian person. — mes/or-rhin, mes/o-rhin (mĕs'ō-rĭn), -rhine (-rīn ; -rĭn), a. & n. — mes/or-rhin-ism, mes/o-rhin-ism (-rĭn-ĭz'm), n.

mes/o-sal'pinx (-săl'pĭŋks), n. [NL. ; meso- + salpinx.] Anat. A fold of the broad ligament investing and supporting the Fallopian tube.

mes/o-scle-rom'e-ter (-sklē-rŏm'ē-tẽr), n. [meso- + sclerometer.] Mech. A kind of sclerometer for testing the hardness of a material by the penetration of a definitely weighted revolving stylus.

mes/o-seis'mal (-sīs'măl ; -sīz'măl), a. [meso- + seismal.] Pert. to the center of an area of earthquake disturbance.

Mes/o-sphæ'rum (-sfē'rŭm), n. [NL.; meso- + Gr. σφαῖρα ess of the endosternite which, meeting its fellow in the median line, forms an arch over the sternal canal. — mes/o-phrag'mal (-măl), a.

mes-oph'ry-on (mĕs-ŏf'rĭ-ŏn), n. [NL., fr Gr μεσόφρυον; μέσος middle + ὀφρύς eyebrow.] Anat. The glabella.

mes'o-phyl'lum (mĕs'ō-fĭl'ŭm), n. [NL. ; meso- + Gr. φύλλον leaf.] Bot. Mesophyll mes-oph'y-tum (mĕs-ŏf'ĭ-tŭm), n.; L. pl. -TA (-tă). [NL.] Bot. The line between internode and petiole. Obs. Lindley.

mes-op'ic (mĕs-ŏp'ĭk), a. [meso- + Gr. ὤψ, ὠπός, face.] Craniom. See ORBITONASAL INDEX.

mes/o-pleu'ron (-plōō'rŏn), n.; pl. -RA (-ră). [NL.] Zoöl. One of the pleura of the mesothorax of an insect. — mes/o-pleu'ral (-răl), a.

Mes-op'lo-don (mĕs-ŏp'lō-dŏn), n. [NL. ; meso- + Gr ὅπλα arms + ὀδούς, ὀδόντος, tooth.] Zoöl. A genus of small whales having two conical teeth, one on each side and near the middle of the lower jaw. — mes-op'lo-dont (-dŏnt), a.

mes/o-po-tam'ic (mĕs'ō-pō-tăm'ĭk), a. Pertaining to, or of the nature of, a mesopotamia.

mes/o-pre-scu'tal (-prē-skū'tăl), n. [NL.] Zoöl. The prescutum of the middle thoracic segment of an insect. — mes/o-pre-scu'tum (-tŭm), n. [NL.] Zoöl. The prescutum of the middle thoracic segment of an insect. — mes/o-pre-scu'tal (-tăl), a.

mes/o-pro-sop'ic (mĕs'ō-prō-sŏp'ĭk), a. [meso- + Gr. πρόσωπον face.] Craniom. Having a face of medium proportion or medium facial index.

mesorable. † MEASURABLE.

mes-or'chi-um (mĕs-ôr'kĭ-ŭm), n. [NL.; meso- + Gr. ὄρχις a testicle.] Embryol. & Zoöl. The fold of peritoneum which attaches the testis to the dorsal wall of the body cavity or scrotal sac in the fetus. — mes-or'chi-al (-ăl), a.

mes-or'cin (mĕs-ôr'sĭn), mes-or'cin-ol (-sĭ-ŏl), n. [G., fr. dinaxymesitylen + resorcin.] Chem. A dihydric phenol, $C_6H(CH_3)_3(OH)_2$, which can be regarded both as being a trimethyl derivative of resorcin and as being a dihydroxy derivative of mesitylene.

mes/o-rec'tum, n. Embryol. The fold of peritoneum, or mesentery, attached to the rectum. — mes/o-rec'tal, a.

Mes/o-re'o-don (mĕs/ō-rē'ō-dŏn), n. [NL. See MESO-; OREODON.] Paleon. A genus of extinct artiodactyl ungulates belonging to the family Merycoidodontidæ, from the Miocene of North America. It is peculiar in the possession of a clavicle.

mes/or-rhi'nal, mes/o-rhi'nal (mĕs/ō-rī'năl), a. Pert. to the mesorhinium; situated between the nostrils.

mes/or-rhin'i-um, mes/o-rhin'i-um (-rĭn'ĭ-ŭm), n. [NL.; meso- + Gr. ῥίς, ῥινός, nose.] Zoöl. The basal internasal part of the upper side of the bill of a bird.

Mes/o-sau'ri-a (-sô'rĭ-ă), n. [NL.] = MOSASAURIA.

mes/o-scap'u-la, n. Zoöl. The spine of the scapula regarded as a distinct element. — mes/o-scap'u-lar, a.

mes/o-scu-tel'lum, n.; L. pl. -LA (-ă). [NL.] Zoöl. Scutellum of the mesothorax — mes/o-scu-tel'lar (-ăr), a.

mes/o-scu'tum, n. Zoöl. The scutum of the middle thoracic segment of an insect. — mes/o-scu'tal, a.

mes'o-seme (mĕs'ō-sēm), n. [meso- + Gr. σῆμα sign, mark; cf. F. mésosème.] Craniom. See ORBITAL INDEX.

mes/o-sid'er-ite, n. Min. See METEORITE.

mes/o-skle-rom'e-ter Var of MESOSCLEROMETER.

mes/o-so'ma (mĕs/ō-sō'mă), n.; L. pl. -MATA (-tă) [NL. ; meso- + Gr. σῶμα, σώματος, body.] Zoöl. The middle region of the body of certain invertebrates, as lamellibranchs. — mes/o-so-mat'ic (-sō-măt'ĭk), a.

mes/o-some, n. [meso- + 3d -some.] Zoöl. = MESOSOMA.

mes/o-sperm, n. Bot. The secundine. Rare.

sphere.] Bot. A large genus of chiefly tropical American mints with clustered, variously colored flowers, the corolla with a saccate, drooping lower lip.

mes-os'ta-sis (mĕs-ŏs'tȧ-sĭs), n. [NL.; meso- + Gr. στάσις standing.] Base; groundmass. See BASE, n., 11 b.

mes'o-state (mĕs'ō-stāt), n. [meso- + Gr. ἱστάναι to make to stand.] Biol. An intermediate product of metabolism (which see). A mesostate is an anastate or katastate, according as it is formed by an anabolic or katabolic process.

mes'o-ster'num (-stûr'nŭm), n.; pl. -STERNA (-nȧ). [NL.; meso- + sternum.] a Anat. The middle portion of the sternum, between the presternum and the xiphisternum. In man it is known as the gladiolus. b Zoöl. The ventral piece of the middle segment of the thorax in insects. — mes'o-ster'nal (-nȧl), a.

mes'o-sty'lous (-stī'lŭs), a. [meso- + style.] Bot. Midstyled; — said of certain heterostyled flowers having styles intermediate in length between the longest and shortest. Cf. MACROSTYLOUS, MICROSTYLOUS.

mes'o-the'li-um (-thē'lĭ-ŭm), n. [NL.; meso- + epithelium.] Anat. & Embryol. a Epithelium of mesoblastic origin. b That part of the mesoblast (and the tissues which are derived from it) which lines the primitive cœlom, and is distinguished from the mesenchyma by its more or less epithelial character. In vertebrates it forms two principal layers, a visceral (splanchnopleuric) and a parietal (somatopleuric), and gives rise to the epithelium of the peritoneum and pluræ, the striated muscles, parts of the urogenital organs, etc. — mes'o-the'li-al (-ȧl), a.

mes'o-therm (mĕs'ō-thûrm), n. [meso- + Gr. θέρμη heat.] Bot. Any plant which requires only a moderate degree of heat for its successful growth. Such plants are found in the warmer parts of the temperate zones of both hemispheres outside of the mountains, where the temperature ranges from 15° to 20° C. Cf. MEGATHERM, MICROTHERM.

me-tab'o-lism (mĕ-tăb'ō-lĭz'm), n. Biol. The sum of the processes concerned in the building up of protoplasm and its destruction incidental to the manifestation of vital phenomena; the chemical changes proceeding continually in living cells, by which the energy is provided for the vital processes and activities, and new material is assimilated to repair the waste. Metabolism may be constructive (termed anabolism or assimilation) or destructive (katabolism or dissimilation). Both forms consist of a series of steps. In anabolism these are in the main synthetic, resulting in building up of the nutritive substances into the more complex living protoplasm. In katabolism they are mainly destructive, decomposing and oxidizing the protoplasm into simpler bodies with a liberation of energy. Anabolism and katabolism go on together, but one may predominate and obscure the other. The anabolic power of animal cells is small, and the katabolism (in consequence of their greater activity) usually greater than in plants; they require complex organic substances (proteids, carbohydrates, fats, etc.) as nutriment, and they excrete simple substances, as water, carbon dioxide, urea, etc., as katabolic products. The cells composing the green tissue of plants are highly anabolic, building up carbohydrates from the carbon dioxide of the air by photosynthesis, and utilizing these substances, with the nitrates and other mineral salts absorbed from the soil, in the construction of complex compounds, also in numerous secretions and by-products. See NUTRITION, SECRETION, ASSIMILATION, KATABOLISM.

me-tab'o-lize (-līz), v. t.; -LIZED (-līzd); -LIZ'ING (-līz'ĭng). Physiol. To subject to metabolism; to change the character of by either anabolism or katabolism.

met'a-bo'ric (mĕt'ă-bō'rĭk; 201), a. [meta- + boric.] Chem. Pert. to or designating an acid, HBO_2, obtained as a glassy amorphous solid by heating ordinary boric (orthoboric) acid to 100° C. (212° F.). Most metallic borates come from it.

met'a-car'pal (mĕt'ă-kär'păl), a. Anat. Of or pertaining to the metacarpus. — n. A metacarpal bone.

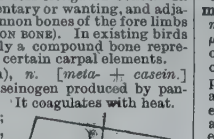
met'a-car'pus (-pŭs), n. [NL., fr. Gr. μετακάρπιον; μετά beyond, between + καρπός the wrist.] Anat. & Zoöl. The part of the hand or fore foot (esp. of its skeleton) between the carpus and the phalanges, comprising, when all the digits are present, five more or less elongated bones. In many animals some are rudimentary or wanting, and adjacent ones may fuse, as in the cannon bones of the fore limbs of various ungulates (see CANNON BONE). In existing birds the metacarpus comprises only a compound bone representing three metacarpals and certain carpal elements.

met'a-ca'se-in (mĕt'ă-kā'sē-ĭn), n. [meta- + casein.] Physiol. Chem. A form of caseinogen produced by pancreatic extract acting on milk. It coagulates with heat.

met'a-cen'ter } (mĕt'ă-sĕn'tĕr;
met'a-cen'tre } n. [meta- + center; cf. F. métacentre.] Hydros. & Shipbuilding. The point of intersection (M in Illust.) of the vertical through the center of buoyancy (B) of a floating body with the vertical through the new center of buoyancy (B') when the body is displaced however little. When M is above the center of gravity (G) of the floating body the position of the body is stable; when below it, unstable; when coincident with it, neutral. There is in general a different metacenter for each position and displacement of the floating body.



Metacenter.

met'a-cen'tric (-sĕn'trĭk), a. Of or pert. to the metacenter. metacentric height, the distance between the metacenter and the center of gravity of a floating body. — m. stability. = INITIAL STABILITY.

met'a-chem'ic (-kĕm'ĭk) } a. 1. Passing the bounds of met'a-chem'i-cal (-ĭ-kăl) } chemistry proper; of or pertaining to highly speculative chemistry.

2. Geol. Metasomatic.

Met'a-chla-myd'e-æ (-klā-mĭd'ē-ē), n. pl. [NL. See META-; CHLAMYDEOUS.] Bot. A division of dicotyledonous seed plants (subclass Dicotyledones), in which the parts of the inner floral envelope, or corolla, are more or less united, the corolla being called gamopetalous. Plants of this group are of later phylogenetic development, indicating a higher type of structure, than those of the contiguous group Archichlamydeæ. Also called Gamopetalæ and Sympetalæ. — met'a-chla-myd'e-ous (-ē-ŭs), a.

met'a-chro'ma-tism (-krō'mă-tĭz'm), n. [meta- + Gr. χρῶμα, χρώματος, color.] Change of color, esp. from heating or cooling. — met'a-chro-mat'ic (-krō-măt'ĭk), a. metachromatic granule, Bacteriol., one of the granules found in the protoplasmic substance of many bacteria, staining deeply with aniline dyes. They are variously regarded as the progenitors of spores, as nuclear structures, waste products, or reserve substances.

me-tach'ro-nism (mē-tăk'rō-nĭz'm), n. [Gr. μετάχρονος, μεταχρόνιος, after the time, happening afterward; μετά beyond + χρόνος time; cf. F. métachronisme, LL. metachronismus.] An error in chronology committed by placing an event after its real date. Cf. PARACHRONISM.

met'a-chro'sis (mĕt'ă-krō'sĭs), n. [NL.; meta- + Gr. χρώσις a coloring.] Zoöl. The power of changing color at will by the expansion of special pigment cells, under nerve influence, as seen in many reptiles, fishes, etc. Cope.

met'a-cism (mĕt'ă-sĭz'm), n. [L. metacismus, Gr. μυταικισμός fondness for the letter μ.] a The placing of a word with final m before a word beginning with a vowel, — regarded as a fault in Latin prose composition. Oxf. E. D. b Lat. Gram. Pronunciation of a final m before a vowel where it should be elided. c Mytacism.

met'a-cy'clic (-sī'klĭk; -sĭ'klĭk), a. [meta- + cyclic.] Math. Denoting, or pert. to, any permutation of elements in any given cycle of numbers. See GROUP, EQUATIONS.

metacyclic equation, Math., an equation that can be solved by solving a series of cyclic equations; a solvable equation.

me-tad'ro-mous (mē-tăd'rō-mŭs), a. [meta- + -dromous.] Bot. Having the primary veins in each segment given off from the upper side of the midrib, as in some ferns.

met'age (mēt'ăj), n. [From METE, v.] Official measurement of contents or weight; also, the charge for it.

met'a-gen'e-sis (mĕt'ă-jĕn'ē-sĭs), n. [meta- + -genesis.] Biol. Alternation of generations; specif., alternation of a gemmiparous and a sexual generation.

met'a-ge-net'ic (-jē-nĕt'ĭk), a. 1. Biol. Of or pertaining to metagenesis.

2. Cryst. Designating twins formed by additional deposition from crystals originally simple. Cf. PARAGENETIC.

met'a-ge-om'e-try (-jē-ŏm'ē-trĭ), n. [meta- + geometry.] Geometry that ignores the tacit assumption of Euclid that the straight line is infinite; the geometry of Riemannian space; more generally, any non-Euclidean geometry. See PARALLEL POSTULATE. — met'a-ge-om'e-ter (-tĕr), n. — met'a-ge'o-met'ri-cal (-jē'ō-mĕt'rĭ-kăl), a.

met'a-ig'ne-ous (mĕt'ă-ĭg'nē-ŭs), a. Geol. Designating certain metamorphic rocks. See METAMORPHISM.

met'al (mĕt'ăl), n. [ME. metal (also metail), OF. id., F. métal, L. metallum metal, mine, Gr. μέταλλον mine; cf. Gr. μεταλλᾶν to search after. Cf. METTLE, MEDAL.] 1. Any of a class of substances which typically are fusible and opaque, are good conductors of electricity, and show a peculiar luster (see METALLIC LUSTER), as gold, bronze, aluminium, etc.; also, any such substance without reference to special character; as, a ball of metal. Most metals are also malleable, and comparatively heavy, and all except mercury are solid at ordinary temperatures.

2. Chem. Specif., an elementary metal, as distinguished from a mixed metal, or alloy. The metals constitute over three fourths of the recognized elements. They form oxides and hydroxides which are basic, and they may exist in solution as positive ions. Some metals, however, also show acidic properties, in so far resembling the nonmetals. See NONMETAL. Arsenic is classed sometimes as a metal, from its physical properties in the free state, but oftener as a nonmetal, from its chemical behavior. The radical ammonium is by some regarded as a metal. See AMMONIUM.

☞ In naming new metals, it is customary to use the suffix -um or -ium; as, aluminium, niobium.

3. Her. Either of the two noble metals, argent (silver) and or (gold), used as tinctures.

4. A metal object (of the kind contextually indicated).

5. Material; substance; stuff; — often used in special manufactures to denote partially prepared materials. Hence, disposition; temper; spirit; mettle. See METTLE.

Not till God make men of some other metal than earth. Shak.

6. In technical and specif. uses: a Glass in a state of fusion. b The black fused mass obtained in the manufacture of potassium ferrocyanide. c Type metal; hence, Print., state of being in type. d Roads, Railroads, etc. = ROAD METAL. e Metal. In the Welsh method of copper smelting, the regulus or matte. It is called, according to its appearance and the percentage of copper, coarse metal, about 20 to 40 per cent; red metal, about 48 per cent; blue metal, about 60 per cent; sparkle metal, about 74 per cent; white metal and pimple metal, about 77 to 79 per cent. Fine metal includes the last four. Hard metal is impure copper containing much tin.

7. Hardened clay; shale.

8. Mining. a Ore from which a metal is derived. b In Coal Mining, country rock as distinguished from coal.

9. A mine; — in phrase to condemn to metals. Obs. & R.

10. The effective power or caliber of guns on a war vessel; as, a ship with more metal in its main battery.

11. The speculum of a reflecting telescope. Obs.

metals of the alkaline earths. See ALKALINE EARTHS.

met'al (mĕt'ăl), v. t.; MET'ALED (-ăld) or MET'ALLED; MET'AL-ING or MET'AL-LING. To cover or furnish with metal; as, to metal a ship's bottom; to metal a road.

met'al-am-mo'ni-um (-ă-mō'nĭ-ŭm), n. [metal + ammonium.] Chem: Any radical derived from ammonium by replacing more or less of its hydrogen by a metal.

met-al'de-hyde (mĕt-ăl'dē-hīd), n. [meta- + aldehyde.] Chem. A white crystalline substance, $C_8H_{12}O_3$, a polymer of ordinary aldehyde, and formed from it by cold in the presence of small amounts of certain substances, as sulphuric acid. It is reconvertible into acetic aldehyde by heat.

met'a-lep'sis (mĕt'ă-lĕp'sĭs), n.; pl. METALEPSES (-sēz). [L., fr. Gr. μετάληψις participation, alteration, fr. μεταλαμβάνειν to partake, to take in exchange; μετά beyond + λαμβάνειν to take.] 1. In ancient rhetoric, a figure consisting of the substitution by metonymy of one word for another which would itself be taken figuratively.

2. Chem. Metalepsy; substitution.

met'a-lep'sy (mĕt'ă-lĕp'sĭ), n. [Cf. F. métalepsie. See METALEPSIS.] Chem. Substitution; metathesis.

met'a-lep'tic (-lĕp'tĭk), a. [Gr. μεταληπτικός.] 1. Of or pertaining to a metalepsis.

2. Transverse; as, the metaleptic motion of a muscle.

3. Chem. Of, pertaining to, or concerned in, metalepsy.

met'al-ine (mĕt'ăl-ĭn; -ēn), n. A substance of variable composition, but resembling a soft, dark-colored metal, used in the form of plugs inserted into holes drilled in machine bearings, for obviating friction, and as a substitute for ordinary lubricants. — met'al-ined (-ĭnd; -ēnd), a.

met'al-ing, or met'al-ling, p. pr. & vb. n. of METAL. Specif.: a. Metal for a road or railroad.

me-tal'lic (mē-tăl'ĭk), a. [L. metallicus, fr. metallum: cf. F. metallique. See METAL.] 1. Of, pertaining to, or characteristic of, a metal; of the nature of metal, specif. of a metal in the free state (i. e., not combined), as in oxides and salts; resembling metal; as, a metallic rod, appearance, element; metallic iron; a metallic voice.

2. Yielding metal; metalliferous.

met'a-brush'ite (-brŭsh'īt), n. Min. A mineral closely similar to, and occurring with, brushite.

met'a-car-pa'le (-kär-pā'lē), n. pl. -PALIA (-lĭ-ă). [NL.] Anat. A metacarpal bone.

met'a-car'po-pha-lan'ge-al (-kär'pō-fă-lăn'jē-ăl), a. Anat. Pertaining to the metacarpus and the phalanges. [= FUNGIN.]

met'a-cel'lu-lose (-sĕl'ū-lōs), n met'a-cen'tral, a. Metacentric.

met'a-ce'ri-um (mĕt'ă-sē'rĭ-ŭm), n. Chem. A supposed element of the rare earth group, announced by Brauner in 1897.

met'ac'e-tone (mĕt-ăs'ē-tōn), n. [F. métacétone. See META-; ACETONE.] Chem. A liquid mixture obtained by distilling a mixture of sugar and lime, formerly regarded as a polymeric modification of acetone.

met'a-chem'is-try, n. A word used by Emerson for processes analogous to chemistry in a nonmaterial sphere: "An affair of race or of metachemistry." met'a-chlo'ral (mĕt'ă-klō'răl), 201), n. Chem. A polymeric variety of chloral formed as a white, amorphous, insoluble substance by contact of chloral with sulphuric acid.

me-tach'ysis (mē-tăk'ĭ-sĭs), n. [NL.; meta- + Gr. χύσις a pouring] Med. Transfusion of blood.

met'a-cin'na-bar-ite (mĕt'ă-sĭn'ă-bär-īt), n. Min. Native mercuric sulphide, HgS, like cinnabar in composition, but isometric in form and black.

met'a-cis'mus (-sĭz'mŭs), n. [NL.] = METACISM b.

met'ac-neme (mĕt'ăk-nēm), n. [meta- + Gr. κνήμη shin.] Zoöl. A mesentery of any of the various secondary sets developed in most Zoantharia.

met'a-cone (-kōn), n. Zoöl. The posterior of the three cusps of a primitive upper molar; in higher forms, the postero-external cusp. The corresponding cusp of a lower molar, called met'a-co'nid (-kō'nĭd), is the postero-internal. See TRITUBERCULY.

met'a-co'nule (-kō'nūl), n. Zoöl. The posterior intermediate cusp of a mammalian upper molar between the hypocone and the metacone. See TRITUBERCULY. [2 b; COPAIVIC.]

met'a-co-pa'vic, a. See META-; met'a-cor'a-coid. n. Zoöl. One of the two elements forming the coracoid process. Howes.

met'a-cre'sol, n. Chem. One of the three cresols. See CRESOL.

met'a-cro'le-in (mĕt'ă-krō'lē-ĭn), n. Chem. A polymeric modification of acrolein, $(C_3H_4O)_3$, got by distilling acrolein hydrochloride ($CH_2Cl{\cdot}CH_2CHO$) with caustic potash. It is a crystalline substance of aromatic odor.

met'a-cro'mi-on (-krō'mĭ-ŏn), n. [NL.] Zoöl. A process projecting backward and downward from the acromion of the scapula of some mammals. — met'a-cro'mi-al (-ăl), a.

met'a-cy-e'sis (-sī-ē'sĭs), n. [NL. See META-; CYESIS.] Med. Extra-uterine pregnancy.

me-tad' (mē-tăd'), n. [Telugu dial. mettāḍ.] A mouse of India (Mus meltada).

met'a-der'ma-to'sis, n. [NL. See META-; DERMATOSIS.] Med. Morbid development of the skin.

met'a-di'a-base, n. Petrog. See META-.

met'a-di-az'ine, n. Also -in. Org. Chem. See DIAZINE. [META-.]

met'a-di'o-rite, n. Petrog. See met'a-dis-coi'dal, a. Anat. & Zoöl. Designating a form of placenta. See PLACENTA, I.

met'a-el'e-ment, n. [meta- + element.] Chem. Any of several supposed varieties of an element showing slight differences, as in spectrum, but not sufficiently distinct to be considered separate elements: — a term used by Sir William Crookes, in connection with his study of the rare-earth group.

met-æs'the-tism, met-es'the-tism (mĕt-ĕs'thē-tĭz'm), n. [See META-; ÆSTHETICS.] Biol. The doctrine that "consciousness is a product of the evolution of matter and force." Cope.

me-tal'lics (mē-tăl'ĭks), n. pl. Metallic substances.

met'al-lif'er-ous (mĕt'ăl-ĭf'ẽr-ŭs), a. [L. metallifer; metallum metal + ferre to bear.] Producing or containing metal; yielding metals.

me-tal'li-form (mē-tăl'ĭ-fôrm), a. [L. metallum metal + -form.] Having the form or properties of a metal.

me-tal'li-fy (-fī), v. t.; -FIED (-fīd); -FY'ING (-fī'ĭng). [L. metallum metal + -fy.] To convert into metal.

me-tal'lik (mē-tăl'ĭk), n. [Turk. See METAL; cf. BESHLIK.] Any of a series of debased coins still current in Turkey. The one nominally worth 20 paras, usually called yirmilik, varies in actual value from 10 to 18 paras (1 to 2 cents).

met'al-line (mĕt'ăl-ĭn; -ĭn, 277), a. [Of F. métallin.] 1. Pertaining to, or resembling, a metal; metallic. 2. Impregnated with metallic salts; as, metalline water.

met'al-list (-ĭst), n. A worker in metals, or one skilled in metals.

met'al-lize (-īz), v. t.; -LIZED (-īzd); -LIZ'ING (-īz'ĭng). a To make metallic; to coat with metal; to impregnate with a metal or metallic compound. b To vulcanize. Rare. metallized filament, Elec., a carbon filament, for glowlamps, which has been subjected to very high temperatures in the electric furnace. This so modifies the carbon as to permit a considerable increase in the temperature at which the lamp may be operated. — metallized glass, glass containing metallic spangles. Cf. AVENTURINE, n., 1.

me-tal'lo-chrome (mē-tăl'ō-krōm; mĕt'ăl-ō-krōm'), n. [metallo- + Gr. χρῶμα color.] A coloring or ring produced on metal by electrolytic deposition. See NOBILI'S RINGS.

me-tal'lo-chro'my (-krō'mĭ), n. [L. metallum metal + Gr. χρῶμα color.] The art or process of coloring metals, esp. by electrolytic deposition. See NOBILI'S RINGS.

me-tal'lo-graph (mē-tăl'ō-grăf), n. [metallo- + -graph.] A print made by metallography.

me-tal'lo-graph'ic (mē-tăl'ō-grăf'ĭk; mĕt'ăl-ō-), a. 1. Pertaining to the description of coins. Obs. 2. Pertaining to, or produced by means of, metallography.

met'al-log'ra-phist (mĕt'ăl-ŏg'rā-fĭst), n. 1. One who writes on the subject of metals. 2. One who is skilled in, or who practices, metallography.

met'al-log'ra-phy (-fĭ), n. [metallo- + -graphy: cf. F. métallographie.] 1. The science or art of metals and metal working; also, a treatise on metals. 2. Microscopic study of metal structure and alloys. 3. A method of transferring impressions of the grain of wood to metallic surfaces by chemical action. 4. A substitute for lithography, in which metallic plates are used instead of stone.

met'al-loid (mĕt'ăl-oid), n. [metallo- + -oid: cf. F. métalloïde.] Chem. a An alkali metal, as sodium, or an alkaline earth metal, as calcium; — so called by Davy because not supposed to be well-defined metals. Obs. b Sometimes, an element, as arsenic, antimony, or tellurium, resembling the typical metals in some ways only. c Usually, a nonmetal. See NONMETAL.

met'al-loid, a. 1. Having the appearance of a metal. 2. Chem. Of, pert. to, or of the nature of, a metalloid.

met'al-lom'e-ter (-ŏm'ē-tẽr), n. [metallo- + meter.] A machine for testing small thin metal strips by flexion.

me-tal'lo-phone (mē-tăl'ō-fōn), n. [metallo- + -phone.] Music. a An instrument like a pianoforte, but having metal bars instead of strings. b An instrument like the xylophone, but having metallic instead of wooden bars.

met-al'lo-plas'tic (mē-tăl'ō-plăs'tĭk; mĕt'ăl-ō-), a. [metallo- + -plastic.] Of or pertaining to the deposition of metal from solution in producing casts.

met'al-los'co-py (mĕt'ăl-ŏs'kŏ-pĭ), n. [metallo- + -scopy.] Med. A theoretical method of diagnosis and selection of remedies by observing the effects of metals on the skin. — me-tal'lo-scop'ic (mē-tăl'ō-skŏp'ĭk; mĕt'ăl-ō-), a.

me-tal'lo-ther'a-py (mē-tăl'ō-thĕr'ă-pĭ; mĕt'ăl-ō-), n. [metallo- + therapy.] Med. Treatment of disease, esp. of nervous affections, by applying metallic plates to the body.

met'al-lur'gic (mĕt'ăl-ûr'jĭk) } a. [Cf. F. métallurgique.] met'al-lur'gi-cal (-jĭ-kăl) } Of or pertaining to metallurgy. — met'al-lur'gi-cal-ly, adv.

met'al-lur'gist (mĕt'ăl-ûr'jĭst), n. One who is skilled in, or who practices, metallurgy.

met'al-lur'gy (-jĭ), n. [L. metallum metal, Gr. μέταλλον a mine + the root of ἔργον work: cf. F. métallurgie. See METAL; WORK.] The science and art of preparing metals for use from their ores by separating them from mechanical mixture and chemical combination. It includes various processes, as smelting, amalgamation, electrolytic refining, etc. Metallurgy, as usually understood, is concerned with the production of raw material, the manufacture of which into finished articles belongs to other arts.

met'a-log'i-cal (mĕt'ă-lŏj'ĭ-kăl), a. [meta- + logical.] Beyond the scope or province of logic.

met'a-lu'mi-nate (-lū'mĭ-nāt), n. [meta- + aluminate.] Chem. A salt of the hypothetical acid, $HAlO_2$, derived from aluminium; as, calcium metaluminate, $Ca(AlO_2)_2$. The minerals called spinels are metaluminates.

met'a-math'e-mat'ics (-măth'ē-măt'ĭks), n. The philosophy of the higher mathematics; the study of relations of space and manifoldness transcending ordinary higher mathematics. — met'a-math'e-mat'i-cal (-măth'ē-măt'ĭ-kăl), a.

met'a-mer (mĕt'ă-mẽr), n. [See METAMERE.] Chem. A compound which is metameric with one or more others.

met'a-mere (-mēr), n. [meta- + -mere.] Zoöl. One of the more or less similar segments or parts arranged in a longitudinal series composing the body of many animals; a somite or somame. Such segmentation is present in very varying degrees; it is best marked in many of the worms and in arthropods, but is also exhibited by the vertebrates, as in the spinal column, ribs, etc.

met'a-mer'ic (-mẽr'ĭk), a. [meta- + Gr. μέρος part.] 1. Zoöl. Of or pertaining to a metamere or metamerism. 2. Chem. Having the same elements united in the same proportion by weight, and with the same molecular weight, but of different structure and different properties; isomeric (in the specific sense). See ISOMERIC. Berzelius, the author of this term, probably meant to limit it to cases in which the different forms easily change into one another. It has also been limited to cases in which the forms have the same type but contain different radicals.

me-tam'er-ism (mē-tăm'ẽr-ĭz'm; 277), n. 1. Zoöl. The state of being made up of metameres; serial segmentation. 2. Chem. State or quality of being metameric; also, the relation or condition of metameric compounds.

met'a-mer'i-za'tion (mĕt'ă-mẽr'ĭ-zā'shŭn), n. Zoöl. The formation or differentiation of metameres.

me-tam'er-ized (mē-tăm'ẽr-īzd), a. Zoöl. Divided into metameres.

met'a-mor'phic (mĕt'ă-môr'fĭk), a. [See METAMORPHOSIS.] 1. Subject to change; changeable; variable. 2. Causing a change of structure. 3. Geol. Of, pertaining to, produced by, or exhibiting, metamorphism; as, metamorphic rocks. See METAMORPHISM.

met'a-mor'phism (-fĭz'm), n. 1. Metamorphosis. 2. Geol. In its broadest sense, any change in the constitution of any kind of rock; more commonly, a pronounced change, generally effected by the combined action of pressure, heat, and water, resulting in a more compact and more highly crystalline condition of the rock. This phase of metamorphism is anamorphism, and is opposed to katamorphism, which is the breaking down of rock by chemical or mechanical processes. For convenience, distinction is made between local, or contact, metamorphism, produced by the intrusion of igneous masses or heated waters, and regional, or general, metamorphism, affecting wide areas. In the latter case pressure is the most important factor, and such heat as is involved is largely generated by the molecular and other movements which result from the pressure. Water, which is present in most rocks, acts by solution and redeposition; heat and pressure increase its potency. Pressure may have an effect apart from any movement of the rock masses (static metamorphism), or it may produce motion and deformation (dynamic metamorphism). Thermal metamorphism places emphasis on heat as a factor in the process, hydrothermal metamorphism on heat and moisture. Among the effects of metamorphism (anamorphism) are: consolidation (either by mere pressure or by cementation), expulsion of water, gas, etc., obliteration of fossils, production of fissility and schistosity, change of crystal form (paramorphism), and change of chemical constitution (metasomatism). Both igneous and sedimentary rocks may be metamorphosed. Marble is metamorphosed limestone; most gneiss is metamorphosed granitic rock; while schists, which represent extreme metamorphism, may be derived from almost any sort of rock. Quartzite, derived from sandstone or quartz conglomerate by further cementation, and slate from clay and shale, are partially metamorphosed rocks. Rocks produced by the metamorphism of sediments are sometimes called metasedimentary rocks, and those from igneous rocks, meta-igneous rocks. See also DYNAMOMETAMORPHISM, HYDROMETAMORPHISM, METASOMATISM. Cf. EPIGENESIS, 3.

met'a-mor'phist (-fĭst), n. Eccl. One believing that the body of Christ merged into the Deity when he ascended.

met'a-mor-phop'si-a (-môr-fŏp'sĭ-ă), n.; L. pl. -SLÆ (-ē). [NL. See METAMORPHOSIS; -OPSIA.] A derangement of the sense of localization of objects which may arise from misplacement of a portion of the retina or of the skin without entire detachment of it or loss of sensibility in it.

met'a-mor'pho-scope (-môr'fō-skōp), n. [See METAMORPHOSIS; -SCOPE.] A toy in which grotesque effects are produced by the successive interchange of heads, bodies, and legs in a series of fantastically drawn figures. The parts are mounted on separate parallel bands which travel at different speeds through the field of view.

met'a-mor'phose (mĕt'ă-môr'fōz; -fōs), v. t.; -PHOSED (-fōzd; -fōst); -PHOS-ING. [Cf. F. métamorphoser.] 1. To change into a different form; to transform; transmute. And earth was metamorphosed into man. Dryden. 2. To cause to undergo metamorphosis; to subject to metamorphism.

Syn. — See TRANSFORM.

met'a-mor'phose, v. i. Zoöl. To undergo a change of form.

met'a-mor'pho-sic (-fō-sĭk), a. Of or pert. to metamorphosis.

met'a-mor'pho-sis (-sĭs), n.; pl. METAMORPHOSES (-sēz). [L., fr. Gr. μεταμόρφωσις, fr. μεταμορφοῦν to transform; μετά beyond, over + μορφή form.] 1. Change of form, structure, or substance, esp. by witchcraft or magic; transformation of any kind; also, the form resulting from metamorphosis; as, the Metamorphoses of Ovid, a collection of legends of transformations. 2. Zoöl. A marked and more or less abrupt change in the form or structure (and usually also in the habits, food, etc.) of an animal in the course of its postembryonic development, as when the larva of an insect becomes a pupa, or the pupa an imago, or a tadpole changes to a frog. In entomology a metamorphosis is said to be complete when the larva, pupa, and imago differ from each other greatly in structure. An incomplete metamorphosis implies that the young hatches from the egg with the general form of the adult and at no time passes into a quiescent stage corresponding to a pupa. 3. Bot. The sum of the various modifications through which a primitive plant structure may pass in the course of its development. Goethe's theory, which was held by most botanists of the 19th century, held metamorphosis to be purely phylogenetic, and that highly differentiated organs, such as stamens and pistils, arise by transformation of primitive foliage leaves. It is now known that it is primarily ontogenetic, and that changes in mature organs are due to influences affecting the primordia of those organs. Thus the primordia of foliar structures may be developed according to the actual needs of the plant as scales, foliage leaves, or sporophylls. 4. Physiol. Metabolism. 5. Med. A form of degeneration marked by conversion of certain tissues or structures into other material.

met'a-nau'pli-us (mĕt'ă-nô'plĭ-ŭs), n. [NL. See META-; NAUPLIUS.] Zoöl. A larval stage of crustaceans, following the nauplius, with about seven pairs of appendages.

met'a-neph'ros (-nĕf'rŏs), n. [NL; meta- + Gr. νεφρός kidney.] Embryol. The most posterior of the three pairs of embryonic renal organs developed in typical vertebrates. See KIDNEY. — met'a-neph'ric (-rĭk), a.

met-an'il, or met-an'i-line, yellow (mĕt-ăn'ĭl; -ĭ-lĭn; -ĭ-lēn). A poisonous yellow azo dyestuff derived from metanilic acid and used in wool dyeing, paper staining, carpet printing, etc.; — called also Victoria yellow.

met'a-nil'ic (-nĭl'ĭk), a. Chem. Designating, or pert. to, a crystalline acid, $C_6H_4(NH_2)SO_3H$, isomeric with sulphanilic acid. Chemically, it is meta-amino-benzene sulphonic acid.

met'a-no'tum (mĕt'ă-nō'tŭm), n.; L. pl. -NOTA (-tă). [NL.; meta- + Gr. νῶτον back.] Zoöl. The dorsal portion of the metathorax of insects. — met'a-no'tal (-tăl), a.

met'a-phase (mĕt'ă-fāz), n. [meta- + phase.] Biol. A period preceding the anaphase in mitosis, when the chromosomes have been drawn to the equator of the spindle. In typical cases the splitting of the chromosomes then occurs.

met'a-phor (mĕt'ă-fôr), n. [F. métaphore, L. metaphora, fr. Gr. μεταφορά, fr. μεταφέρειν to carry over, transfer; μετά beyond, over + φέρειν to bring, bear. See META-; BEAR to carry.] Rhet. A figure of speech by which a word or phrase literally denoting one kind of object or idea is applied to another by way of suggesting a likeness or analogy between them; the transference of terms denoting one thing to the expression of another; as in "the ship plows the sea;" "a volley of oaths." A metaphor may be regarded as a compressed simile, the comparison implied in the former being explicit in the latter. Thus compare "a marble brow" with "a brow white like marble."

Syn. — See COMPARISON.

met'a-phor'ic (-fôr'ĭk), a. Metaphorical.

met'a-phor'i-cal (-ĭ-kăl), a. [Gr. μεταφορικός: cf. F. métaphorique.] Of, pert. to, or comprising, a metaphor; figurative; as, a metaphorical expression. — met'a-phor'i-cal-ly, adv. — met'a-phor'i-cal-ness, n.

met'a-phrase (mĕt'ă-frāz), n. [Gr. μετάφρασις, from μεταφράζειν to paraphrase; μετά beyond, over + φράζειν to speak: cf. F. métaphrase.] A verbal translation; a version or translation from one language into another; esp., a word-for-word translation, as opposed to a paraphrase.

met'a-phrase, v. t.; MET'A-PHRASED (-frāzd); MET'A-PHRAS'ING (-frāz'ĭng). a To make a metaphrase of. Formerly, specif., to render into verse. b To alter the wording of.

met'a-phrast (-frăst), n. [Gr. μεταφράστης.] One who metaphrases, as by rendering verse into a different meter, or prose into verse. — met'a-phras'tic (-frăs'tĭk), met'a-phras'ti-cal (-tĭ-kăl), a. — met'a-phras'ti-cal-ly, adv.

met'a-phys'ic, n. [Cf. F. métaphysique.] 1. = METAPHYSICS.

Words are the beginning of metaphysic. Stevenson.

2. Metaphysical character or constitution.

met'a-phys'i-cal (-ĭ-kăl), a. [Cf. F. métaphysique, LL. Metaphysical logic.

met'a-log'ra-phy. Var. of METALLOGRAPHY.

met'a-loph (mĕt'ă-lŏf), n. [meta- + Gr. λόφος crest.] Zoöl. See ECTOLOPH.

met'al-or-gan'ic (mĕ-tăl'ôr-găn'ĭk), a. Organometallic.

metal work. Work, esp. artistic work, in metal.

met-am'er-al (mē-tăm'ẽr-ăl), a. Zoöl. Metameric.

met-am'er-ide (mē-tăm'ẽr-īd; -ĭd, 184), n. A metamer.

me-tam'er-ous (-ŭs), a. Metameric.

met'a-mor'fose. Metamorphose. Ref. Sp. [phosis. Ref. Sp.

met'a-mor-phop'sy (mĕt'ă-môr-fŏp'sĭ), n. = METAMORPHOPSIA.

met'a-mor'phos-a-ble (mĕt'ă-môr'fŏs-ă-b'l), a. See -ABLE.

met'a-mor'phose (-fōs), n. [Cf. F. métamorphose.] Metamorphosis.

met'a-mor'phos-er (-ẽr), n. One that metamorphoses.

met'a-mor-pho'sian (-môr-fō'zhăn), a. Metamorphosic.

met'a-mor'phy (mĕt'ă-môr'fĭ), n. Metamorphosis. Rare.

met'amp (mĕt'ămp), n. [Shortened fr. metamorphosis.] Zoöl. In certain sponges, any of two or more forms in which the same species may grow. Bidder.

Met'a-myn'o-don (-mĭn'ō-dŏn), n. [NL.; meta- + Amynodon.] Paleon. A genus of extinct hornless rhinoceroses from the Oligocene of North America.

met'a-ne-phrit'ic (-nē-frĭt'ĭk), a. Embryol. Metanephric.

met'a-neph'ron (-nĕf'rŏn), n.; pl. -RA (-rā). [NL.] Embryol. The metanephros.

met'a-ni-tran'i-line, n. Also -lin. Chem. = NITRANILINE.

met-an'ti-mo-nate' (mĕt-ăn'tĭ-mō-nāt'), n. Chem. A salt of metantimonic acid. See ANTIMONIC ACID.

met-an'ti-mon'ic (mĕt-ăn'tĭ-mŏn'ĭk), a. See ANTIMONIC ACID.

met-an'ti-mo'ni-ous (-tĭ-mō'nĭ-ŭs), met-an'ti-mo-nous (mĕt-ăn'tĭ-mō-nŭs), a. Chem See ANTIMONIOUS ACID.

met-an'ti-mo-nite', n. Chem A salt of metantimonious acid.

met'a-nu'cle-us (mĕt'ă-nū'klē-ŭs), n. Biol. A nucleolus extruded from the germinal vesicle.

met'a-or'gan-ism, n. A transcendental organism; an organism belonging to a higher order than the physical.

met'a-pec'tate, n. Org. Chem. A metarabate. [abic.]

met'a-pec'tic, a. Chem. Metarabic.

met'a-pec'tin, n. Chem A substance obtained by boiling pectin with dilute acids.

met'a-pep'tone, n. Physiol. Chem. An intermediate product formed in the gastric digestion of albuminous matter.

metaph. Abbr Metaphysics.

met'a-phe-nom'e-nal, a Transcending the phenomenal. — met'a-phe-nom'e-non, n.

met'a-phe'nyl-ene, n. Org. Chem The meta variety of the radical phenylene. See PHENYLENE DIAMINE.

me-taph'er-y (mē-tăf'ẽr-ĭ), n. [meta- + -phery as in periphery.] Bot. A displacement of the whorls in cyclic flowers. Rare.

met'a-phlo'ĕm (mĕt'ă-flō'ĕm), n. Bot. That portion of the phloëm developed in connection with the metaxylem.

me-taph'o-ny (mē-tăf'ō-nĭ), n. [meta- + -phony.] Phon. Umlaut. — met'a-phon'i-cal (mĕt'ă-fŏn'ĭ-kăl), a. — met-aph'o-nize (mĕ-tăf'ō-nīz), v. t.

met'a-phor-ist, n. One who makes metaphors. [-IZE.]

met'a-phor-ize, v. t. & i. See met'a-phos'phate (-fŏs'fāt), n. Chem. A salt of metaphosphoric acid. See PHOSPHORIC ACID.

met'a-phos-phor'ic (-fŏs-fŏr'ĭk), a. See PHOSPHORIC ACID.

met'a-phragm (mĕt'ă-frăm), met'a-phrag'ma (-frăg'mă), n. [NL. metaphragma; meta- + Gr. φράγμα a fence.] Zoöl. An internal partition between the metathorax and abdomen of insects. — met'a-phrag'mal (-frăg'măl), a.

me-taph'ra-sis (mē-tăf'rā-sĭs), n. [NL. See METAPHRASE.] = METAPHRASE Obs.

metaphysicus.] 1. Of or pertaining to metaphysics; according to rules or principles of metaphysics; hence, abstract or abstruse; as, metaphysical reasoning.

As in the night all cats are gray, so in the darkness of metaphysical criticism all causes are obscure. Wm. James.

2. Pert. to, or having, real being or the essential nature of reality; as, metaphysical truth; metaphysical being.

I have given prominence to the strictly "metaphysical" rather than to what is technically called the "epistemological" meaning of the word Idealism itself. Josiah Royce.

3. Preternatural or supernatural. Obs.

Fate and metaphysical aid. Shak.

4. Designating, or pertaining to, a so-called "school" of 17th-century poets, whose works abound in cold and forced conceits or elaborate subtleties of thought and expression; — so called by Dr. Johnson. Donne, Cowley, Herbert, and Crashaw are of this group.

metaphysical idealism. See IDEALISM.—m. necessity. See NECESSITY. —m. whole. See WHOLE.

met'a-phys'i-cal-ly (mĕt'ă-fĭz'ĭ-kăl-ĭ), adv. 1. In the manner of metaphysical science, or of a metaphysician.

2. In the mode of a metaphysical reality or existence.

3. Supernaturally. Obs.

met'a-phy-si'cian (mĕt'ă-fĭ-zĭsh'ăn), n. [Cf. F. métaphysicien.] One who is versed in metaphysics.

met'a-phys'ics (-fĭz'ĭks), n. (See -ICS.) [Gr. μετὰ τὰ φυσικά after those things which relate to external nature, after physics, fr. μετα beyond, after + φυσικός relating to external nature, natural, physical, fr. φύσις nature: cf. F. métaphysique. See PHYSICS; cf. METAPHYSIC, n. The term was first used, it is believed, by Andronicus of Rhodes, the editor of Aristotle's works, as a name for that part of his writings which came after the Physics.] That division of philosophy which includes ontology, or the science of being, and epistemology, or the theory of knowledge; in a looser sense, all of the more abstruse philosophical disciplines; in a narrower sense, ontology alone. The primary meaning of metaphysics is derived from those discussions by Aristotle which he himself called the First Philosophy or Theology, and which deal with the nature of being, with cause or genesis, and with the existence of God. Later, possibly in part owing to the name, taken as signifying that which is beyond or above the physical, metaphysics was understood as the science of the supersensible. By Albertus Magnus it was called the transphysical science; and Aquinas considered it to be concerned with the cognition of God. Scholastic philosophy in general understood it as the science of being in itself, that is, as ontology, a meaning which, with some difference of interpretation, is still retained. The Renaissance resulted in two developments. In Germany, Christian Wolff divided metaphysics into ontology, cosmology, psychology, and natural or rational theology. In England, Bacon defined it as the quest or study of formal and final causes, contrasting with it natural philosophy as treating efficient and material causes. As philosophy received from Descartes its peculiarly epistemological character, the conception of metaphysics altered from the science of being to the science of the conditions of knowledge. In England, owing to the prevalence of psychological problems, it became practically identified with the analytical psychology of the time; while in Germany, Kant's Critique asserted its transcendental province, as the science of pure, or a priori, reason. The notion that metaphysics is concerned with that which transcends experience led to the positivistic denial of the possibility of metaphysical knowledge, while the critical spirit and logical point of view of Kant caused metaphysics to be identified with logic by Hegel. Schopenhauer and later writers have insisted that metaphysics is concerned with analysis of experience, in the broad sense, although this view is largely followed by modern writers, many of whom also tend to emphasize the distinction between epistemology, or theory of knowledge, and metaphysics proper, or ontology.

Metaphysics, that fertile field of delusion propagated by language. J. S. Mill.

Another and a perfectly distinct department of science, to which the name metaphysics more particularly belongs, [is] that portion of mental philosophy which attempts to determine what part of the furniture of the mind belongs to it originally, and what part is constructed out of materials furnished to it from without. J. S. Mill.

Commonly, in the schools, called metaphysics, as being part of the philosophy of Aristotle, which hath that for title; but it is in another sense; for there it signifieth as much as "books written or placed after his natural philosophy." But the schools take them for "books of supernatural philosophy;" for the word metaphysics will bear both these senses. Hobbes.

Now the science conversant about all such inferences of unknown being from its known manifestations, is called ontology, or metaphysics proper. Sir W. Hamilton.

met'a-phyte (mĕt'ă-fīt), n. [meta- + -phyte.] Bot. A multicellular plant; — opposed to protophyte. — met'a-phyt'ic (-fĭt'ĭk), a.

met'a-pla'si-a (-plā'zhĭ-ă), n. [NL. See META- ; -PLASIA.] Physiol. Direct conversion of one form of tissue into another form, as of cartilage into bone.

me-tap'la-sis (mĕ-tăp'lă-sĭs), n. [NL. See META- ; -PLASIS.] Biol. The period of fulfilled growth and development in the ontogeny of an individual.

met'a-plasm (mĕt'ă-plăz'm), n. [L. metaplasmus, Gr. μεταπλασμός; μετά beyond, over + πλάσσειν to mold.] 1. Gram. a A change in the letters or syllables of a word. b The use for oblique cases of forms not from the nominative stem.

2. Biol. That part of the contents of a cell consisting of lifeless matter or inclusions, as certain carbohydrates. Some of them may later be converted into protoplasm, cell walls, or secretions.

met'a-plas'tic (-plăs'tĭk), a. a Physiol. Pert. to, or produced by, metaplasia. b Of or pert. to metaplasm.

met'a-po'di-al (-pō'dĭ-ăl), a. Zoöl. a Of or pert. either to the metacarpus or metatarsus. b Of or pert. to the metapodium. — n. A metacarpal or metatarsal bone.

met'a-po'di-a'le (-ā'lē), n.; pl. -ALIA (-lĭ-ă). [NL.] Zoöl. A metapodial bone.

met'a-po'di-um (-pō'dĭ-ŭm), n.; pl. -DIA (-dĭ-ă). [NL.; meta- + -podium.] Zoöl. The posterior division of the foot in mollusks.

met'a-pol'i-tics (-pŏl'ĭ-tĭks), n. Rarely met'a-pol'i-tic (-tĭk). Theoretical political science; also, political theorizing. — met'a-po-lit'i-cal (-pō-lĭt'ĭ-kăl), a. — met'a-pol'i-ti'cian (-pŏl'ĭ-tĭsh'ăn), n.

met'a-poph'y-sis (-pŏf'ĭ-sĭs), n.; pl. -SES (-sēz). [NL. See META- ; APOPHYSIS.] Anat. A tubercle projecting from the anterior articular process of a vertebra, esp. in the lumbar region. In man they are rudimentary and known as mammillary processes or tubercles. In the armadillo they assist in supporting the dorsal armor. — met-ap'o-phys'e-al (mĕt-ăp'ō-fĭz'ē-ăl), met-ap'o-phys'i-al (-ĭ-ăl), a.

me-tap'sy-cho'sis (mĕ-tăp'sĭ-kō'sĭs), n. The action of mind on mind without known physical agency.

me-tap'ter-yg'i-um (mĕ-tăp'tĕr-ĭj'ĭ-ŭm), n. [NL.; meta- + Gr. πτερύγιον fin.] Zoöl. The posterior of the three principal basal cartilages in the paired fins of certain fishes, esp. sharks and rays. — me-tap'ter-yg'i-al (-tĕr-ĭj'ĭ-ăl), a.

met'ap-ter'y-goid (mĕt'ăp-tĕr'ĭ-goid), a. [meta- + pterygoid.] Zoöl. Situated behind the pterygoid. — n. A metapterygoid bone. In teleost fishes it is the third and most posterior of the pterygoid elements, and is commonly articulated in front with the mesopterygoid.

met-ar'a-bic (mĕt-ăr'ă-bĭk), a. [meta- + arabic.] Org. Chem. Designating, or pert. to, an acid, $C_{12}H_{20}O_{10}$(?), a constituent of cherry and beech gums and beet pulp, and formed artificially by heating arabic acid. It is a pentosan, yielding xylose by hydrolysis. In water it swells, but does not dissolve.

met'a-so'ma-tism (mĕt'ă-sō'mă-tĭz'm) } n. [meta- + Gr.
met'a-so'ma-to'sis (-sō'mă-tō'sĭs) } σῶμα, σώματος, body.] Geol. Metamorphism developed by chemical transformation of the constituent minerals and the replacement of some of them.

met'a-sta'ble (mĕt'ă-stā'b'l), a. Physical Chem. Designating, or pert. to, a condition or phase of comparative stability, which, however, passes into the stable phase when brought into contact with even the smallest particle of the stable form. The crystallization of supersaturated solutions is an illustration of this change.

met'a-stan'nate (-stăn'āt), n. Chem. a A salt of metastannic, or β-stannic, acid. b A salt of the general formula M_2SnO_3, from α-stannic acid. See STANNIC ACID.

met'a-stan'nic (-ĭk), a. Chem. Designating an acid of tin. See STANNIC ACID.

me-tas'ta-sis (mĕ-tăs'tă-sĭs), n.; pl. -SES (-sēz). [L., transition, fr. Gr. μετάστασις, fr. μεθιστάναι to place in another way; μετά after + ἱστάναι to place.] 1. Rhet. Change of subject, esp. sudden transition.

Metastasis, or the flitting figure. Puttenham

2. a Physiol. & Med. Change in place of a disease, bodily function, etc.; transfer of a function, disease, or morbific matter, from one part or organ to another, as of mumps from parotid gland to testicles. b Biol. Metabolism.

3. Change of state, substance, or form; esp., Theol., a spiritual change, as during baptism.

The lamp and oil man, just then beginning, by a not unnatural metastasis, to bloom into a lighthouse engineer. Stevenson.

met'a-stat'ic (mĕt'ă-stăt'ĭk), a. Of, pertaining to, or caused by, metastasis; as, a metastatic abscess.

met'a-ster'num (-stûr'nŭm), n. [meta- + sternum.] a Anat. The most posterior element of the sternum; the xiphisternum. In Human Anat., usually called ensiform process. b Zoöl. The ventral plate of the metathorax. — met'a-ster'nal (-stûr'năl), a.

me-tas'to-ma (mĕ-tăs'tō-mă), n. [NL.; meta- + Gr. στόμα mouth.] Zoöl. A median platelike or bifid process behind the mouth in crustaceans and related arthropods. met'a-tar'sal (mĕt'ă-tär'săl), a. Anat. Of or pertaining to the metatarsus. — n. A metatarsal bone.

met'a-tar-sal'gi-a (-tär-săl'jĭ-ă), n. [NL.; metatarsus + -algia.] Pain in the metatarsus, — a form of neuralgia.

met'a-tar'sus (-tär'sŭs), n.; pl. -SI (-sī). [NL. See META-; TARSUS.] 1. Anat. & Zoöl. The part of the foot (in animals of the hind foot), or of its skeleton, between the tarsus and phalanges, comprising, when all the digits are present, five more or less elongated bones. These are reduced in number or fused in many animals in a similar way to those of the metacarpus. In man it forms the instep; in horses and cattle, the part of the hind leg from the hock to the fetlock joint, the functional part of the skeleton being reduced to the cannon bone. In birds the metatarsus, ordinarily called shank or tarsus, contains a large bone representing three fused metatarsals and certain distal tarsal elements (united with its proximal end), and usually a rudiment of a fourth metatarsal.

2. Zoöl. a The tarsus of the posterior pair of legs of an insect. b The proximal segment of the tarsus of an insect. c The proximal segment of the foot of a spider.

met'a-tat'ic (-tăt'ĭk) } a. [meta- + Gr. τείνειν to met'a-tat'i-cal (-ĭ-kăl) } stretch.] Physics. Coincident in direction with the directions of stress or strain; — said of certain axes or planes used in discussing the elastic properties of bodies. — met'a-tat'i-cal-ly, adv.

Met'a-the'ri-a (-thē'rĭ-ă), n. pl. [NL. See META-; -THERIUM.] Zoöl. In some classifications, a subclass of mammals coextensive with the order Marsupialia. — met'a-the'ri-an (-ăn), a. & n.

me-tath'e-sis (mĕ-tăth'ĕ-sĭs), n.; L. pl. -SES (-sēz). [L., fr. Gr. μετάθεσις, fr. μετατιθέναι to place differently, to transpose; μετά beyond, over + τιθέναι to place, set. See THESIS.] 1. Gram. Transposition, as of the letters, sounds, or syllables of a word; as, A.-S. ascian, axian (cs = x); OHG. erila, elira; the deaf-mutism kinfe for knife, and similar miswritings or mispronunciations; Falstaff for Fastolph.

2. Med. A mere change in position of a morbid substance, without removal from the body, as the pushing back into the bladder of a calculus located in the urethra.

3. Chem. = SUBSTITUTION.

4. Logic. See MODE, Second Figure.

— met'a-thet'ic (mĕt'ă-thĕt'ĭk), -thet'i-cal (-ĭ-kăl), a.

met'a-tho'rax (-thō'răks), n. [NL. See META-; THORAX.] Zoöl. The posterior segment of the thorax in insects. It bears the third pair of legs and the second pair of wings. — met'a-tho-rac'ic (-thō-răs'ĭk), a.

met'a-tung'stic (-tŭng'stĭk), a. [meta- + tungstic.] Chem. Designating, or pert. to, any of various complex tungstic acids, esp. one obtained as a yellow crystalline solid soluble in water, having the formula $H_2W_4O_{13}$ ascribed to it.

‖ mé'ta'yage' (mā'tĕ'yäzh'; E. mĕ-tā'yĕj; 277), n. [F. See MÉTAYER.] The métayer system of farming land.

mé'ta'yer' (F. mā'tĕ'yā'; E. mĕ-tā'yĕr; 277), n. [F., fr. LL. (assumed) medietatarius, fr. L. medietas half. See MOIETY.] One who cultivates land for a share (usually one half) of its yield, receiving stock, tools, and seed from the landlord. Cultivation of land on this system (called the metayer system or system of share rent) was once common in England and continental Europe. It survives in Italy, and is used locally in the United States and other countries.

Met'a-zo'a (mĕt'ă-zō'ă), n. pl. [NL.; meta- + Gr. ζῷον animal.] Zoöl. A collective name for all animals except the Protozoa. They have the body when adult composed of numerous cells differentiated into tissues and organs, and, except in a few degraded parasitic forms, a digestive cavity lined with specialized cells. Reproduction is chiefly (in a majority of forms always) sexual, and each individual thus produced begins its existence as a single cell (see EGG), which by mitotic division and differentiation of the resulting new cells grows into an adult organism, generally passing through an embryonic stage known as a gastrula (which see), or some recognizable modification of it.

met'a-zo'ic (-ĭk), a. Zoöl. Metazoan.

mete (mēt), v. t.; MET'ED (mēt'ĕd); MET'ING (mēt'ĭng). [AS. metan; akin to D. meten, G. messen, OHG. mezzan, Icel. meta, Sw. mäta, Goth. mitan, L. modus measure, moderation, modius a corn measure, meditari to meditate, Gr. μέδειν to rule, μέδιμνος a corn measure, and perh. ultimately from the same root as E. measure, L. metiri to measure; cf. Skr. mā to measure. Cf. MEDITATE, MEET, a., MODE.] 1. To find the quantity, dimensions, or capacity of, by any rule or standard; to measure.

2. To assign by measure; to apportion; allot; — chiefly with out; as, to mete out punishment or reward.

3. To determine the limits or value of by measure. Obs.

[NL.; meta- + Gr. φρήν, φρενός, diaphragm.] The part of the back behind the diaphragm.

met'a-phy-si'cian-ism (mĕt'ă-fĭ-zĭsh'ăn-ĭz'm), n. See -ISM.

met'a-phys'i-cist (-fĭz'ĭ-sĭst), n. = METAPHYSICIAN.

met'a-phys'i-cize (-sīz), v. i. & t. See -IZE.

met'a-phys'i-cous, a. Versed in metaphysics. Rare.

met-taph'y-sis (mĕ-tăf'ĭ-sĭs), n. [NL., fr. Gr. μεταφύεσθαι to become by change; cf. Gr. φύσις nature.] Change of form; transformation.

me-taph'y-ton (-tŏn), n. [NL.] Bot. = METAPHYTE.

met'a-pleur. Var. of METAPLEURE. [PLEURON.]

met'a-pleu'ra, n., pl. of META-PLEURUM.

met'a-pleu'ral (-plōō'răl; 248), a. Zoöl. a Of or pert. to a metapleure. b Of or pert. to the metapleuron; posterior and lateral.

met'a plum'bate (-plŭm'bāt), n.; met'a-plum'bic (-bĭk), a. See PLUMBIC ACID; -ATE, 3 b.

met'a-pneu-mon'ic (-nū-mŏn'ĭk), a. Succeeding pneumonia.

met'ap-neu'sic (mĕt'ăp-nū'sĭk), a. [meta- + Gr. πνευστικός pert. to breathing.] Zoöl. Breathing through a single pair of posterior or anal spiracles, as certain insect larvæ.

met'a-pore, n. [meta- + pore.] Anat. The foramen of Magendie.

met'a-post'acu-tel'lum, n. Zoöl. The postscutellum of the metathorax of an insect. — met'a-post'scu-tel'lar, a.

met'a-pre-scu'tum, n. Zoöl. The prescutum of the mesothorax of an insect. — met'a-pre-scu'tal, a.

met'ap-to'sis (mĕt'ăp-tō'sĭs), n. [NL., fr. Gr. μετάπτωσις change. See PTOSIS.] 1. Med. Transformation; metastasis.

2. Logic. Change of a proposition from being false to being true, or the reverse. Cent. Dict.

met'a-py-ret'ic, a. [meta- + pyretic.] Med. Occurring, or performed, after septic fever; as, metapyretic amputation.

metar. ✣ METER, measurer.

met-ar'a-bate (mĕt-ăr'ă-bāt), n. Chem. A salt of metarabic acid.

met-ar'gon, n. [meta- + argon.] Chem. A supposed gaseous element announced in 1898 by Ramsay and Travers as occurring in minute amount in the atmosphere, but subsequently shown by them to be carbon monoxide. [See META-.]

met-ar'se-nate (mĕt-ăr'sē-nāt), n. Chem. A salt of metarsenic acid. See ARSENIC ACID a. met'ar-sen'ic, a. [meta- + arsenic.] Chem. See ARSENIC ACID.

met'ar-se'ni-ous, a. [meta- + arsenious.] See ARSENIOUS ACID.

met-ar'se-nite (mĕt-ăr'sē-nīt), n. Chem. A salt of metarsenious acid. See ARSENIOUS ACID a.

met'a-sac-char'ic, a. [meta- + saccharic.] Chem. a Mannosaccharic; specif., l-mannosaccharic. b See SACCHARIC ACID b met'a-sac'cha-rin, n. [meta- + saccharin.] An isomer of saccharin, $C_6H_{10}O_5$, obtained by treating lactose with lime.

met'a-sche'ma-tism (mĕt'ă-skē'mă-tĭz'm), n. [Gr. μετασχηματισμός change of form.] 1. Med. A change in the form of a disease.

2. A new arrangement.

met'a-scu-tel'lum, n. [NL.] Zoöl. The scutellum of the metathorax of an insect — met'a-scu-tel'lar, a.

met'a-sed'i-men'ta-ry, a. See METAMORPHISM, 2.

met'a-sil'i-cate (mĕt'ă-sĭl'ĭ-kāt), n. Chem. See SILICATE met'a-si-lic'ic (-sĭ-lĭs'ĭk), a. Chem. See SILICIC ACID.

met'a-so'ma (-sō'mă), n.; L. pl. -SOMATA (-tă). [NL.; meta- + Gr. σῶμα body.] Zoöl. The hinder part of the body of a mollusk. — met'a-so'mal (-măl), a.

met'a-so'ma-sis (-mă-sĭs), n. Metasomatosis.

met'a-so-mat'ic, a. a Zoöl. Of or pert. to a metasoma. b Geol. Of or pert. to metasomatosis.

met'a-so'mate (mĕt'ă-sō'māt), n. = METASOMA.

met'a-sperm, n. [meta- + -sperm.] Bot. An angiosperm. — met'a-sper'mic, a. — met'a-sper'mous, a.

Met'a-sper'mæ (-spûr'mē), n. pl. [NL. See -SPERM.] Syn. of ANGIOSPERMÆ.

met'a-state (mĕt'ă-stāt), n. [meta- + Gr. ἱστάναι to make to stand.] = METOSTATE.

met'a-stat'i-cal (-stăt'ĭ-kăl), a. = METASTATIC.

met'a-stat'i-cal-ly, adv. of METASTATIC, -STATICAL.

met'a-sthen'ic (-sthĕn'ĭk), a. Zoöl. Strong in the hinder part of the body.

met'a-stig'mate (-stĭg'māt), a. Zoöl. Having posterior stigmata; — said of certain insect larvæ met'a-stome (mĕt'ă-stōm), n. = METASTOMA. [(of a tooth.]

met'a-sty'lar (-stī'lăr), a. See STYLE met'a-syn'cri-sis (-sĭn'krĭ-sĭs), n. [NL., fr. Gr. μεταςύγχρισις.] Med. a Discharge of morbid matter through the pores, etc. Obs b Recomposition after momentary dissolution; restoration to the natural state. — met'a-syn-cri'tic (-sĭn-krĭt'ĭk), a. (-ĭ-kăl).

met'a-tarse (mĕt'ă-tärs), n. Anat. The metatarsus. Rare.

met'a-tar'so-phal'an-ge'al (-tär'sō-fă-lăn'jē-ăl), a. Anat. Pert. to the metatarsus and the phalanges.

met'a-tar-tar'ic (-tär-tăr'ĭk), a. Chem. Designating an acid isomeric with, and formed by melting, tartaric acid.

me-ta'te (mĕ-tā'tē), n. [Sp., fr. Mex. metlatl.] A stone, the upper surface of which is a concave incline, used by Mexican women in grinding corn, etc.

met'a-the-o'ry, n. See META-; THEORY.

met'a-ti-tan'ic, a. [meta- + titanic.] See TITANIC ACID.

met'a-to-lu'ic, a. See META-.

met'a-tome (mĕt'ă-tōm), n. [NL.; meta- + Gr. τομή a cutting.] Arch. The interspace between two dentils.

met'a-troph'ic (-trŏf'ĭk), a. Bot. Saprophytic.

met'a-tung'state (-tŭng'stāt), n. A salt of metatungstic acid.

met'a-type (mĕt'ă-tīp), n. [meta- + -type.] Zoöl. A topotype determined by the original describer of its species.

met-au'ric (mĕt-ô'rĭk), a. [meta- + auric.] Chem. Designating the acid $HAuO_2$. — met-au'rate, n. (see -ATE, 3 b).

met'a-van'a-date (mĕt'ă-văn'ă-dāt), n. A salt of metavanadic acid. See VANADIC ACID.

met'a-va-nad'ic (-vă-năd'ĭk), a. Chem. See VANADIC ACID.

met'a-vol'tine (-vŏl'tĭn), n. [meta- + voltaite.] Min. A complex basic hydrous sulphate, chiefly of iron, occurring as minute yellow scales with voltaite.

me-taxe'lite (mĕ-tăk'sĭt), n. [G. metaxit, fr. Gr. μέταξα silk.] Min. A fibrous serpentine.

met'a-xy'lene (-zī'lēn), n. Org. Chem. See XYLENE.

met'a-zo'ön (-zō'ŏn), n. [NL.] Zoöl. One of the Metazoa.

mete (mēt), v. t. To measure. Archaic. Mark iv. 24.

mete, n. [Cf. AS. gemet. See METE to measure.] a Goal. Obs. b Boundary; — chiefly pl., in metes and bounds.

met'em-pir'ic (mĕt'ĕm-pĭr'ĭk) } a. [meta- + empiric, met'em-pir'i-cal (-ĭ-kăl) } -ical.] Metaph. Related, or belonging, to the objects of knowledge within the province of metempirics. — met'em-pir'i-cal-ly, adv.

met'em-pir'i-cism (-ĭ-sĭz'm), n. The science that is concerned with metempirics. — met'em-pir'i-cist (-sĭst), n.

met'em-pir'ics (-ĭks), n. The science or study of concepts and relations which are conceived as beyond, and yet as related to, the knowledge gained empirically.

me-temp'sy-chose (mē-tĕmp'sĭ-kōs), v. t.; -CHOSED (-kōst); -CHOSING (-kōs'ĭng). [See METEMPSYCHOSIS.] To translate or transfer, as the soul, from one body to another. Rare.

me-temp'sy-cho'sis (-kō'sĭs), n.; pl. -CHOSES (-sēz). [L., fr. Gr. μετεμψύχωσις; μετά beyond, over + ἐμψυχοῦν to animate; ἐν in + ψυχή soul. See PSYCHOLOGY.] The passing of the soul at death into another body, whether of a brute or a person; transmigration of souls. The doctrine of metempsychosis was held by the ancient Egyptians, taught by the Pythagoreans and in the Orphic mysteries of Greece, and is a tenet of East Indian philosophy.

met'emp-to'sis (mĕt'ĕmp-tō'sĭs), n. [NL., fr. Gr. μετά beyond, after + ἔμπτωσις a falling upon, fr. ἐμπίπτειν to fall in or upon; ἐν in + πίπτειν to fall.] Chron. The suppression of a day in the calendar to prevent the date of the new moon being set a day too late, or the suppression of the bissextile day once in 134 years. Cf. PROEMPTOSIS.

met'en-ceph'a-lon (mĕt'ĕn-sĕf'ā-lŏn), n.; L. pl. -LA (-lă). [meta- + encephalon.] Anat., Embryol., & Zoöl. a The posterior segment of the brain, derived from the fifth cerebral vesicle of the embryo; the afterbrain. It is practically coextensive with the medulla oblongata, its cavity forming the posterior part of the fourth ventricle. b The epencephalon. — met-en'ce-phal'ic (mĕt-ĕn'sĕ-făl'ĭk), a.

met-en'ter-on (mĕt-ĕn'tĕr-ŏn), n.; L. pl. -TERA (-ă). [NL.; meta- + enteron.] Zoöl. a The enteron modified in any manner from the primitive archenteron. b One of the radial digestive chambers of an actinozoan as distinguished from the mesenteron. — met-en'ter-on'ic (-ŏn'ĭk), a.

me'te-or (mē'tē-ŏr), n. [F. météore, or LL. meteorum, Gr. μετέωρον, pl. μετέωρα things in the air, fr. μετέωρος high in air, raised off the ground; μετά beyond + ἠωρα, αἴωρα, a suspension or hovering in the air, fr. ἀείρειν to lift, raise up.] 1. Any phenomenon or appearance in the atmosphere, as whirlwinds, clouds, rainbows, etc. Meteors are often classed as: aërial meteors, winds, tornadoes, etc.; aqueous meteors or hydrometeors, rain, hail, snow, dew, etc.; and luminous meteors, including, besides rainbows, halos, etc., the igneous meteors, lightning, shooting stars, and the like. "Hail, an ordinary meteor." Bp. Hall.

2. Specif.: A transient luminous body seen moving rapidly through the atmosphere, esp. in the higher regions, and called specifically, when very brilliant, a fireball or bolide, and when small, a shooting star or falling star; also, loosely, a meteoroid. The earth in its orbit is constantly encountering meteoroids, and their velocity is so great that the resistance of even the rarer portion of the atmosphere quickly raises their surfaces to white heat, thus converting them into meteors. The majority are probably entirely dissipated, but some pass out of the atmosphere again, and the remnants of some fall to the ground as meteorites. The meteoroids are not uniformly distributed; there are various streams or swarms, the orbits of which are closely related to those of certain comets, the passage of the earth near which is the occasion of meteoric showers. Some of these showers recur annually, as the Perseids (Aug. 10-12), Orionids (Oct. 18-20), and Geminids (Dec. 10-12). Others have a longer period. See LEONID, LYRAID, ANDROMEDE.

☞ Meteoric showers are named from the constellations in which their radiants are, as Aquarids (Aquarius), Aquilids (Aquila), Arietids (Aries), Aurigids (Auriga), Draconids (Draco), etc.

me'te-or'ic (-ŏr'ĭk), a. [Cf. F. météorique.] 1. Of or pertaining to a meteor or meteors (in either sense); meteorological; as, meteoric phenomena; meteoric stones.

2. Like a meteor in appearance, flight, etc.; flashing; transiently brilliant; as, swift meteoric fame.

meteoric iron, iron of meteoric origin. See METEORITE. — m. paper, a paperlike substance of confervoid origin found floating in the air. It was formerly supposed to fall from meteors. — m. shower. See METEOR, 2. — m. stone, a meteorite, esp. one wholly or chiefly of stony matter.

me'te-or-ism (mē'tē-ŏr-ĭz'm), n. [Cf. F. météorisme, Gr. μετεωρισμός a lifting up.] Med. Flatulent distention of the abdomen. See TYMPANITES. — me'te-or-is'tic (-ĭs'tĭk), a.

me'te-or-ite' (mē'tē-ŏr-īt'), n. [Cf. F. météorite.] A stony or metallic body that has fallen to the earth from outer space; an aërolite; loosely, a meteor or meteoroid. See METEOR. Meteorites usually show a pitted surface with a fused crust, caused by the heat developed in their rapid passage through the earth's atmosphere. A meteorite may consist: (1) Of metallic iron, which is usually chiefly composed of kamacite and tænite, and is invariably alloyed with a small percentage of nickel and often with small amounts of cobalt, manganese, tin, etc. (meteoric iron, or siderite, formerly holosiderite). When etched this usually exhibits peculiar crystalline figures, called Widmanstätten figures. (2) Of a cellular mass of iron with embedded silicates (siderolite, formerly mesosiderite). (3) Of a stony mass of silicates with little iron (meteoric stone, or aërolite, formerly sporadosiderite). (4) Of a mass without iron (asiderite).

Section of a piece of a Meteorite, or Meteoric Iron, showing Widmanstätten Figures.

me'te-or-it'ic (-ĭt'ĭk), a. Of or pert. to meteorites. — meteoritic hypothesis, the hypothesis that the earth was formed by the aggregation of scattered meteorites. This avoids some of the difficulties militating against the nebular hypothesis, but it has never been marked out into concrete form nor gained general support. It has some features in common with the planetesimal hypothesis.

me'te-or-o-gram' (mē'tē-ŏr-ō-grăm'; mē'tē-ŏr'-), n. [meteor + -gram.] Meteor. The record of a meteorograph.

me'te-or-o-graph' (mē'tē-ŏr-ō-grăf'; mē'tē-ŏr'- ; 277), n. [meteor + -graph: cf. F. météorographe.] 1. Meteor. An autographic apparatus for recording simultaneously several meteorologic elements, as barometric pressure, temperature, moisture, wind, rainfall, sunshine, evaporation, etc.

2. A camera for photographing meteor trails.

me'te-or-og'ra-phy (-ŏr-ŏg'rā-fĭ), n. The registration of meteorological phenomena, as by a meteorograph. — me'te-or-o-graph'ic (-ŏr-ō-grăf'ĭk; mē'tē-ŏr'-), a.

me'te-or-oid' (mē'tē-ŏr-oid'), n. [meteor + -oid,] Astron. One of the countless small solid bodies in the solar system, which become meteors on entering the earth's atmosphere. See METEOR. — me'te-or-ol'dal (-oi'dăl), a.

me'te-or-o-log'ic (mē'tē-ŏr-ō-lŏj'ĭk) } a. [Gr. μετεωρο- me'te-or-o-log'i-cal (-ō-lŏj'ĭ-kăl) } λογικός: cf. F. météorologique.] Of or pert. to the atmosphere and its phenomena, or meteorology. — me'te-or-o-log'i-cal-ly, adv.

meteorological elements, the subjects of meteorological observation, as temperature, barometer pressure, aqueous tension, precipitation, wind velocity, etc.

me'te-or-ol'o-gist (-ŏl'ō-jĭst), n. A specialist in meteorology.

me'te-or-ol'o-gy (-jĭ), n. [Gr. μετεωρολογία; μετέωρος high in the air + λόγος discourse: cf. F. météorologie. See METEOR.] The science, or branch of physics, treating of the atmosphere and its phenomena, esp. of its variations of heat and moisture, of its winds, storms, etc. Cf. CLIMATOLOGY.

me'te-or-om'e-ter (-ŏm'ē-tĕr), n. [meteor + -meter.] An apparatus which transmits automatically to a central station atmospheric changes as marked by the anemometer, barometer, thermometer, etc.

me'te-or-ous (mē'tē-ŏr-ŭs, or, esp. in poetry, mē-tē'ō-rŭs), a. [See METEOR.] Meteoric.

met'er, metre (mē'tĕr), n. [ME. metre (in senses 1 & 3), F. mètre, L. metrum, fr. Gr. μέτρον; akin to Skr. mā to measure; cf. AS. meter, fr. L. See METE to measure.] 1. Rhythmical arrangement of syllables or words in verse; poetical measure, depending on number, quantity, and accent of syllables; rhythm. Also, any specific rhythmical arrangement; as, Horatian meters; dactylic meter.

The only strict antithesis to prose is meter. Wordsworth.

2. Music. That part of musical structure depending primarily on time values; as: a The division of a composition into measures according to a uniform grouping of its rhythmic beats or time units by the heavier "grammatical" accents; less specifically, but more commonly, called time or rhythm. b The distribution of long and short tones within measures. c The formation from measures of larger divisions, such as phrases, sections, or strophes.

Meter, in music, is the grouping of two, three, or more tones, as time units, into a whole, or time integer, called measure, the first part of which — the thesis — has an accent, the second part — arsis — either no accent or a weak one. J. H. Cornell.

3. A metrical composition or, sometimes, version; a poem or verse. Obs. Robinson (More's Utopia).

4. [F. mètre.] A measure of length, the basis of the metric system (which see).

Syn. — See RHYTHM.

me'ter, me'tre (mē'tĕr), v. t. & i.; ME'TERED, ME'TRED (mē'tĕrd); ME'TER-ING (-tĕr-ĭng), ME'TRING (mē'trĭng). To compose in, or put into, meter.

me'ter (mē'tĕr), n. [From METE to measure.] 1. One that measures; esp., an official measurer of commodities.

2. An instrument for measuring, and usually for recording automatically the quantity measured. Gas meters are of two kinds: wet meters, containing a liquid and a partially submerged, partitioned drum rotated by the gas; dry meters, usually indicating by piston displacement. Both are automatic, with the necessary recording clockwork and dials. Water meters usually act by piston displacement or by a rotating vane or a gyrating disk. Electricity meters, for measuring current or energy, are termed electrolytic, clock, or motor, meters, according to whether operated by electrolysis (deposited metal being subsequently weighed), a time clock of changing rate, or a motor and the necessary recording apparatus. Motor meters are now almost exclusively used. See WATTMETER.

me'ter, v. t.; ME'TERED (-tĕrd); ME'TER-ING. To measure by means of a meter or meters.

-meter. [L. metrum measure, or the allied Gr. μέτρον: cf. F. -mètre. See METER rhythm.] A suffix denoting: a An instrument or means for measuring some quantity; as, ba*rometer,* chrono*meter,* volt*meter.* b A poetical measure or arrangement of words or syllables in verse; as, hepta*meter,* tetra*meter.* See 1st METER.

meter, or metre, angle. Med. The angle between the visual axes and the median plane when the eyes are looking at a point one meter from their centers in that plane.

me'ter-gram' (mē'tĕr-grăm'), n. Mech. A measure of energy equal to the work done in lifting a weight of one gram through a distance of one meter.

meter wheel. The chambered drum of a wet meter (see METER), or one used in some carburetors to bring the air or gas into contact with the carbureting liquid.

mete'stick' (mēt'stĭk'), n. [mete, v. + stick.] Naut. A device to level cargo or measure a hold, consisting of a standard with a sliding board or stick projecting at right angles.

meth-ac'e-tin (mĕth-ăs'ē-tĭn), n. Pharm. A colorless crystalline substance used as an antipyretic. Chemically it is para-methoxy-acetanilide, $C_6H_4(OCH_3)NH{\cdot}C_2H_3O$.

meth'a-cryl'ic (mĕth'ā-krĭl'ĭk), a. Chem. Pertaining to or designating a colorless crystalline acid, $CH_2{:}C(CH_3)$-CO_2H, occurring in Roman oil of camomile and also prepared artificially. It is a methyl derivative of acrylic acid, and is isomeric with crotonic acid.

met-hæ'mo-glo'bin (mĕt-hē'mō-glō'bĭn; mĕt-hĕm'ō-; mĕth-ē'mō-), n. Also met-he'mo-glo'bin. [meta- + hæmoglobin.] Physiol. Chem. A soluble, brownish red, crystalline compound, a transformation product of oxyhæmoglobin. It is formed by the spontaneous decomposition of blood and also by the action on blood of various reagents, as ozone, potassium ferricyanide, etc.

meth'ane (mĕth'ān), n. [G. methan; methyl + -an, equiv. to E. -ane.] Chem. A gaseous hydrocarbon, CH_4, light, odorless, and inflammable, occurring naturally as a product of decomposition of organic matter in marshes and mines, and produced artificially by dry distillation of many organic substances; — called also marsh gas. It is a constituent of natural gas and coal gas, and is the first member of the methane, or paraffin, series. See FIRE DAMP.

methane series. Chem. A homologous series of saturated hydrocarbons of the general formula C_nH_{2n+2}, of which methane is the first member and the type; — called also (because of the general chemical inertness and indifference of its members) the paraffin series (little-affinity series). At ordinary temperatures the lowest members, containing one to four carbon atoms, are gases; intermediate members (n = 5-15) are liquids, of which benzine, kerosene, etc., are mainly mixtures; while the highest members, from $C_{16}H_{34}$ on, are white waxy or fatty solids, of a mixture of which ordinary paraffin consists.

meth'a-nom'e-ter (mĕth'ā-nŏm'ē-tĕr), n. [methane + -meter.] An instrument, resembling a eudiometer, to detect the presence and amount of methane, as in coal mines.

me-theg'lin (mē-thĕg'lĭn), n. [W. meddyglyn; meddyg physician (fr. L. medicus) + llyn liquor, juice.] An old-fashioned beverage, usually fermented, made of honey and water; mead or a spiced variety of it. Gay.

meth'e-nyl (mĕth'ē-nĭl), n. [methene + -yl.] Org. Chem. The radical CH, known only in combination.

mete. ✝ MATE, a.; MET.

mete. Obs. or dial. Eng. var. of MEET.

mete. Obs. or Scot. var. of MEAT.

mete, n. Meatus. Obs.

mete, n. [See MEET, a.] An equal. Obs.

me'tel (mē'tĕl), n. [NL. nuz methel, nux metella, fr. Ar. jauz-māṣkī.] A thorn apple; esp., the fruit of Datura metel.

metels, n. [From AS. mētan to dream.] A dream; a vision. Obs.

met'em-pir'ic (mĕt'ĕm-pĭr'ĭk), n. = METEMPIRICIST.

met'emp-sy'chic (mĕt'ĕmp-sĭ'kĭk), me-temp'sy-cho'si-cal (mē-tĕmp'sĭ-kŏ'zĭ-kăl), me-tem'psy-cho'sal (-săl), a. Of or pert. to metempsychosis. R.

me-temp'sy-cho'sist (mē-tĕmp'sĭ-kō'sĭst), n. A believer in metempsychosis.

me-temp'sy-cho'size (-sīz), v. t. = METEMPSYCHOSE. [measure.]

met-en'sar-co'sis (mĕt-ĕn'sär-kō'sĭs), n. [NL.; meta- + Gr. ἐνσάρκωσις incarnation (ἐν in + σάρξ, σαρκός, flesh).] Transfer of flesh from one body to another. Rare.

met'en-so'ma-to'sis (mĕt'ĕn-sō'mā-tō'sĭs), n. [L., fr. Gr. μετενσωμάτωσις.] A change of body or reëmbodiment (by the soul).

me'te-or-gram' (mē'tē-ŏr-grăm'), n. [meteor + -gram.] = METEOROGRAM. [METEOROGRAPH.]

me'te-or-graph' (-grăf'), n. = meteor. Obs. Meteorological; meteorology.

meteor dust. Cosmic dust.

me'te-or'i-cal (mē'tē-ŏr'ĭ-kăl), a. Meteoric.

me'te-or'i-cal-ly, adv. of METEORIC, METEORICAL.

meteorie, n. Atmospheric phenomena: — collectively. Obs.

me'te-or-ist, n. A specialist on the subject of meteors.

me'te-or-it'al (mē'tē-ŏr-ĭt'ăl), a. Meteoritic.

me'te-or-i-za'tion (-ĭ-zā'shŭn; -ĭ-zā'shŭn), n. Med. Production of meteorism.

me'te-or-ize (mē'tē-ŏr-īz), v. t. [Gr. μετεωρίζειν to raise to a height.] 1. To vaporize. Archaic. [or in. Rare.

2. Med. To cause meteorism of] me'te-or-ize, v. i. 1. To vaporize.

2. To take the form or appearance of a meteor; to shine out in a brief brilliance.

me'te-or-o-lite' (mē'tē-ŏr-ō-līt'; mē'tē-ŏr'-), n. [meteor + -lite: cf. F. météorolithe.] A meteoric stone; a meteorite.

me'te-or-ol'o-ger (mē'tē-ŏr-ŏl'ō-jĕr), -o-lo'gi-an (-ŏr-ō-lō'jĭ-ăn), n. A meteorologist.

me'te-or-o-log'ic-al (-ō-lŏj'ĭ-kăl) } a.
me'te-or-o-log'ics (-ō-lŏj'ĭks), n. } Meteorology; — after τὰ μετεωρολογικά of Aristotle.

me'te-or-o-man'cy (mē'tē-ŏr-ō-măn'sĭ), n. [meteor + -mancy.] Divination by meteors, thunder and lightning, etc.

me'te-or-o-scope' (-mē'tē-ŏr-ō-skōp', mē'tē-ŏr'-ō-skōp'), n. [Gr. μετεωροσκόπιον, fr. μετεωροσκόπος observing the heavenly bodies. See METEOR; -SCOPE.] Astron. a An astrolabe; a planisphere. Obs. b An instrument for measuring the position, length, and direction of the apparent path of a meteor.

me'te-or-os'co-py (mē'tē-ŏr-ŏs'kō-pĭ), n. The observation of meteors.

meteor trail. A luminous or phosphorescent train left in the path of a meteor, sometimes carried by the wind like clouds; meteoric train.

met-ep'i-me're-ron (mĕt-ĕp'ĭ-mĕr'ē-rŏn), n. Zoöl. An epimeron of the metathorax of an insect. — met-ep'i-me'ral (-răl), a.

met-ep'i-ster'num (-stûr'nŭm), n. Zoöl. An episternum of the metathorax of an insect. — met-ep'i-ster'nal (-năl), a.

me-ter'rus, n. [From METE to dream.] A dreamer. Obs.

me'ter, n. A line above or below a hanging net, to which the net is attached to strengthen it.

meter prover. A small gas holder whose outflow can be measured, used in testing gas meters.

meter-ship, n. See -SHIP.

me-ter'rus (mē-tĕr'ŭs). Bib.

meteship, n. [AS. metscipe. See MEAT; -SHIP.] Act of eating; also, a meal. Obs.

met'e-the're-al (mĕt'ē-thē'rē-ăl), a. [meta- + ethereal.] Transcending the etheric; belonging or pertaining to a medium subtler than, or different from, ether; as, the metethereal environment, the spiritual or transcendental world in which the soul exists. F. W. H. Myers

mete'while', n. [See MEAT; WHILE, n.] Mealtime. Obs.

mete'yard', n. [Cf. AS. metgeard. See METE to measure; YARD.] A yard or rod used as a measure. Obs. or Dial. Eng.

meteyne. ✝ MITTEN.

Meth. Abbr. Methodist.

meth ✝ METH.

met-h-æm'o-glo'bin or -he'mi-a (mĕt-hē'mō-glō'bĭn; mĕt-hĕm'ō-; mĕth-ē'mō-), n. [NL.; methæmoglobin + -emia.] Med. The occurrence of methæmoglobin in the blood.

met-hæ'mo-glo'bi-nu'ri-a, or -he'mo- (-nū'rĭ-ă), n. [NL.; methæmoglobin + -uria.] Med. The production of methæmoglobin in the urine.

meth'al (mĕth'ăl), n. [G.; myristinsäure + aethal (fr. aether ether + alcohol).] Chem. A waxy substance, $C_{14}H_{29}OH$, an alcohol of the methane series, prepared by reduction of myristic aldehyde, and said to occur in small quantities (in the form of esters) in spermaceti.

meth'a-mat'ic. ✝ MATHEMATIC.

methaphesik. ✝ METAPHYSIC.

meth'a-zon'ic (mĕth'ā-zŏn'ĭk), a. [G. methazonsäure; methan methane + azot azote + -on -one.] Chem. Designating a crystalline acid, $C_2H_4N_2O_3$, salts of which are formed by action of caustic alkalies on nitromethane.

me'the. ✝ MATHE, a grub.

methe, n. [AS. mǣþ.] Measure; limit; hence, characteristic of keeping within bounds, as shown in moderation, temperance, modesty, forbearance, or considerateness. Obs. [Obs.] methe, a. Courteous; gentle] methe, v. t. [AS. mǣðian to regard, spare. See METHE, n.] To moderate; temper; also, to treat with forbearance. Obs.

me-thec'tic (mē-thĕk'tĭk), a. [Cf. Gr. μεθεκτικός participating in.] Designating apparent communications between the different personalities in cases of multiple personality, or any similar psychical phenomenon.

methe'ful, a. [AS. mǣþful.] Moderate. — methe'ful-ly, adv. — methe'fulness, n. All Obs.

me-theg'lin-ist, n. One who brews metheglin. Rare.

met-he'mo-glo'bin. met-he'mo-glo'bi-ne'mi-a, etc. Vars. of METHÆMOGLOBIN, etc.

meth'ene (mĕth'ēn), n. [methyl + -ene.] Chem. Methylene.

methephisike. ✝ METAPHYSIC.

meth'er (mĕth'ĕr). Var. of MADDER, drinking cup.

meth'ide (mĕth'ĭd ; -ĭd ; 184), n. Also -id. [See METHYL.] Chem. A binary compound of methyl with some element ; as, mercury methide, $Hg(CH_3)_2$.

me-thinks' (mē-thĭŋks'), v. impers. ; pret. ME-THOUGHT' (-thôt'). [AS. pyncan to seem, mē þynċ(e)ð, mē þūhte, ME. me think(e)th, me thoughte ; akin to G. dünken to seem, denken to think, E. think. See ME ; THINK.] It seems to me. See I d. Now Rare, except in poetry.

In all ages poets have been had in special reputation, and, methinks, not without great cause. Spenser.

meth'i-on'ic (mĕth'ĭ-ŏn'ĭk), a. [methyl + thionic.] Chem. Designating, or pert. to, a deliquescent crystalline acid, $CH_3(SO_3H)_2$, formed by fuming sulphuric acid acting on acetylene, acetamide, etc. It is a sulphonic acid derivative of methane, and called also methylene disulphonic acid.

meth'od (mĕth'ŭd), n. [F. méthode or L. methodus, fr. Gr. μέθοδος method, investigation following after ; μετά after + ὁδός way.] 1. An orderly procedure or process, as, orig., of treating disease ; regular way or manner of doing anything ; mode of procedure ; hence, manner ; way ; mode ; as, a method of teaching ; a method of improving the mind.

2. Med. The system of the methodics. Hist.

3. Orderly arrangement, elucidation, development, or classification ; lucid exhibition, as of ideas ; systematic arrangement peculiar to a person or a given matter ; plan or design, as of an author ; more generally, orderliness and regularity or habitual practice of them in action.

Though this be madness, yet there 's method in it. Shak.
All method is a rational progress, a progress toward an end. Sir W. Hamilton.

4. Connected arrangement in literary composition ; also, the art of such arrangement or the discipline teaching it.

5. Table of contents. Obs. Shak.

6. An arrangement which follows a plan or design. Obs.

Syn. — Order, system, procedure, process, rule ; way, manner, fashion, course. — METHOD, MODE. METHOD is commonly a special or definite system of procedure ; MODE, as here compared (see FASHION), though often suggesting more definiteness or formality of procedure than "way" or "manner," is ordinarily less specific than method ; as, one's method (cf. one's mode) of teaching, of investigation, of calculation ; one 's mode of speaking, one's mode of life ; "Give me all the hints you can about the method, the mode of treatment, I have adopted" (J. R. Green). But the two words are often interchangeable. See MANNER.

indirect method of difference, or joint method of agreement and difference, Logic, the combined use of the methods of agreement and difference. J. S. Mill. — m. of agreement, Logic, a method of scientific induction according to which it may be inferred that when two or more instances of the phenomenon under investigation have only one circumstance in common, this circumstance is the cause or effect of the phenomenon. J. S. Mill. — m. of concomitant variations, Logic, a method of scientific induction according to which a causal connection or relation of phenomena is to be inferred whenever a change in one is uniformly accompanied by a change in the others. J. S. Mill.

Empirical generalizations in sociology may be made by three methods, namely, the comparative and the historical. Both are forms of what is known in logic as the method of concomitant variations. Each is a systematic observation of coherences among phenomena, combined with an inference that phenomena that persist together, or that change together, are cause and effect, or are effects of a common cause. F. H. Giddings.

— m. of difference, Logic, a method of scientific induction according to which it may be inferred that when in two or more instances having all circumstances save one in common the phenomenon under investigation occurs in one instance only, then the circumstance in which the instances differ is causally connected with the phenomenon. J. S. Mill. — m. of divisors, Math., a method of finding the commensurable roots of an equation from the factors of the absolute term of an equation having integral roots. — m. of exclusion, Logic, in scientific induction, the progressive exclusion of the nonessential by comparison of cases to find the essential residue or real cause. — m. of exhaustions. = EXHAUSTION, n., 2. — m. of extinctions, Astron., the method of ascertaining a star's magnitude by observing its total extinction in a wedge of neutral tinted optical glass. — m. of fluxions. See FLUXION. — m. of increments, Math., the calculus of finite differences ; esp., the treatment of sums and differences in various kinds of functions. — m. of indeterminate coefficients, Math., a method using Descartes's principle that in a power series, $A + Bx + Cx^2 \ldots = 0$, where x is variable and may be made small at will, the constant coefficients A, B, C, . . . must separately equal 0. — m. of indivisibles, Math., a modification of the method of exhaustions, devised by Cavalieri (1635), forerunning the calculus and dealing with points, lines, surfaces as the elements of lines, surfaces, volumes. — m. of isoperimeters, Geom., a method, devised by Descartes but attributed to Schwab, for finding the diameter of a circle having a circumference of given length. — m. of quadratures, Math., a method of approximate integration by cutting up the interval of integration into subintervals so small that the integral for each differs very slightly from some known integral. — m. of residues, Logic, a method of scientific induction according to which it may be inferred that when from any phenomenon such part as is known by previous inductions to be the effect of certain antecedents is subducted, the residue of the phenomenon is the result of the remaining antecedents. J. S. Mill. — m. of sections, Engin., a method of finding analytically the stresses in the parts of a beam, frame, or truss, by taking a section, usually vertically, and writing down the conditions of equilibrium of the cut beam, etc., the stresses being calculated from the resulting equations. — m. of substitution, a method of standardizing or calibrating, especially in comparing units of nearly equal size, as of mass, length, or electric resistance, in which, as in Borda's method of weighing, one of the group of units to be compared is exactly balanced against an unknown but adjustable quantity. The other members of the group are then successively substituted for it and compared with the unknown. — m. of tangents, Math., a method discovered by the French mathematician Roberval, before the invention of the integral calculus, for the calculation of areas, volumes, and centers of gravity by use of tangents to the curve.

me-thod'ic (mē-thŏd'ĭk), a. [L. methodicus, Gr. μεθοδικός : cf. F. méthodique.] 1. Designating, or pertaining to, the ancient school of physicians called methodists. Obs.

2. Done or acting with method ; of or pertaining to method ; methodical ; systematic. Rare.

me-thod'ic (mē-thŏd'ĭk), n. A methodic physician, = METHODIST, 2. Obs. or Hist.

me-thod'i-cal (-ĭ-kăl), a. 1. = METHODIC, 1.

2. Arranged with regard to method ; characterized by method or orderliness ; disposed, performed, or the like, with method or order ; as, methodical arrangement ; a methodical treatise. "Methodical regularity." Addison.

3. Habitually proceeding according to method ; observant of order ; systematic ; as, he is a very methodical person. — me-thod'i-cal-ly, adv. — me-thod'i-cal-ness, n.

me-thod'ics (-ĭks), n. (See -ics.) The art and principles of method ; methodology.

meth'od-ism (mĕth'ŭd-ĭz'm), n. 1. [cap.] Eccl. The doctrines, polity, and worship, peculiar to Methodists.

2. Methodical procedure ; over devotion to methods.

meth'od-ist (-ĭst), n. [Cf. F. méthodiste. See METHOD.]

1. One versed in or observant of method ; one who lays great stress on method. Now Rare.

2 One of an ancient school of physicians who rejected observation and founded their practice on reasoning and theory. They are said to have held views intermediate between those of the dogmatic and empiric schools and to have held that diseased conditions consisted in "looseness," "tightness," or a mixture of the two, for each of which three states there was a suitable remedy.

3. Nat. Hist. A systematist. Obs. or R.

4. Eccl. Hist. a An advocate of a particular theological system ; esp., an Amyraldist. b [cap.] In the 17th century, one of a class of Roman Catholic apologists who gave systematic representations of the method of polemics.

5. [cap.] A member or adherent of a denomination of Protestant Christians, which is the outgrowth of a small religious association or club that was formed at Oxford University, in 1729, by John and Charles Wesley and others. The name was originally one of several applied derisively by the Oxford students to the members of the club, this one alluding to their methodical habits of study and religious observance. The movement, at first one of revival within the Established Church, expanded into a great evangelistic work. Eventually came a separation from the Church of England. In doctrine, the Methodists, like the Wesleys, are Arminians. Whitefield, for a time associated with the Wesleys, was a rigid Calvinist, and so soon separated from them. The Welsh Calvinistic Methodists, the chief religious body of Wales (called also Welsh Presbyterians), are in reality Presbyterians. See PRESBYTERIAN, a. In government, the various Methodist bodies differ. The British Methodist churches are governed through conferences, but are presbyterian in their ministry and congregational in some features of their administration. In America, the prevailing form of polity is a modified episcopacy, with bishops and presiding elders (the latter now called district superintendents in the M. E. Church) as assistants to them. The chief distinctive features of Methodism in general are : (1) the system of probationers ; (2) the class meeting ; (3) exhorters ; (4) local preachers ; (5) the itinerancy ; (6) presiding elders ; (7) bishops. Various bodies of Methodists have rejected some of these. The names, dates of organization, distinctive features, etc., of Methodist bodies in Great Britain, Ireland, and America are as follows :

Great Britain & Ireland. (No bishops ; governed directly through the Conference.)

Wesleyan Methodists : 1739 ; British parent body.
Irish Wesleyan Methodist Church : 1747.
Independent Methodist Churches : 1797 ; each church independent ; no paid ministry.
Primitive Methodist Connexion : 1810 ; large use of laity in church government ; women licensed to preach.
Wesleyan Reform Union : 1859.
United Methodist Church : 1907 ; formed by union of Methodist New Connexion (1797–98), Bible Christians, or Bryanites (1815), and United Methodist Free Churches (1857).

United States. (Orig. and still chiefly episcopal in organization : governed by bishops elected by the General Conference.)

Methodist Episcopal Church : 1784 ; largest body ; home territory, northern U. S.
Methodist Episcopal Church, South ; separated from preceding in 1845 on slavery ; second in size ; home terr., southern U. S.
Union American M. E. Church : 1813 ; colored.
African M. E. Church : 1816 ; colored.
African Union Methodist Protestant Church : 1816 ; colored ; opposes itinerancy, paid ministry, and episcopacy.
African M. E. Zion Church : 1820 ; colored ; women equally eligible with men to all positions.
Methodist Protestant Church : 1830 ; nonepiscopal ; lay representation in Conference equal to ministerial.
Wesleyan Methodist Connection or Church of America : 1843 ; nonepiscopal ; opposed to secret societies.
Primitive Methodist Church ; from England into U. S. about 1843 ; nonepiscopal ; maintains itinerant and local ministers.
Congregational Methodists : 1852 ; nonepiscopal ; not strictly congregational in polity.
Free Methodist Church : 1860 ; since 1907, a bishop presides ; enjoins strict simplicity.
Zion Union Apostolic Church : 1889 ; colored.
Colored M. E. Church : 1870 ; organized from colored members of M. E. Church, South.
New Congregational Methodists : 1881 ; nonepiscopal.
Evangelist Missionary Church : 1886 ; colored ; no creed but Bible.
Independent Methodist Churches : each church independent.

Canada. (Nonepiscopal.)

Methodist Church of Canada : 1874 ; formed by union (1874) of Wesleyan Meth. Ch. in Can., Meth. New Connection, Eastern Brit. Amer. Conferences ; joined (1883) by the M. E. Ch. in Can., Primitive Meth. Ch. in Can., and Bible Christian Ch. of Canada.

6. A person of strict piety ; an exact observer of religious duties ; — sometimes used in contempt or ridicule.

Meth'od-ist, a. Of or pertaining to the Methodists or Methodism ; as, Methodist hymns ; a Methodist elder.

Meth'od-is'tic (mĕth'ŭd-ĭs'tĭk) } a. [often l. c.] Of, per-Meth'od-is'ti-cal (-tĭ-kăl) } taining to, or characteristic of, Methodists or Methodism ; resembling a Methodist. — Meth'od-is'ti-cal-ly, adv.

meth'od-i-za'tion (mĕth'ŭd-ĭ-zā'shŭn ; -ĭ-zā'shŭn), n. Act or process of methodizing, or state of being methodized.

meth'od-ize (mĕth'ŭd-īz), v. t. ; -IZED (-īzd) ; -IZ'ING (-īz'-ĭng). To reduce to method ; to dispose in due order ; to arrange in an orderly manner ; as, to methodize one's work or thoughts ; also, to render methodical.

meth'od-ol'o-gy (-ŏl'ŏ-jĭ), n. [Gr. μέθοδος method + -logy.] The science of method or arrangement ; hence, a branch of logic dealing with principles of procedure whether of theoretic or practical science. — meth'od-o-log'i-cal (mĕth'ŭd-ŏ-lŏj'ĭ-kăl), a. — meth'od-o-log'i-cal-ly, adv. — meth'od-ol'o-gist (-ŏl'ŏ-jĭst), n.

meth-ox'y- (mĕth-ŏk'sĭ-). A combining form denoting the presence of methoxyl, usually replacing hydrogen.

meth-ox'yl (mĕth-ŏk'sĭl), n. [methyl + -oxyl, as in hydroxyl.] Org. Chem. A univalent radical, CH_3O (methyl combined with oxygen), analogous to hydroxyl.

meth-ron'ic (mĕth-rŏn'ĭk), a. [G. *methron*säure ; contracted fr. *methylterylondicarbon*säure.] Chem. Designating, or pertaining to, a white crystalline dibasic acid, $C_8H_8O_5$, produced by certain condensations of acetoacetic ester, and regarded as a derivative of furfurane.

Meth'ven screen (mĕth'vĕn). [After John Methven, the inventor, in England.] Photometry. An opaque screen with a narrow slot so adjusted that a gas flame three inches high will transmit an amount of light through it equal to that of two standard sperm candles.

meth'yl (mĕth'ĭl), n. [See METHYLENE.] Chem. The univalent hydrocarbon radical CH_3, of which methane is the hydride, known only in combination, but a constituent in many compounds ; as, methyl alcohol, methyl ether, methyl amine, etc. The radical was at one time supposed to have been isolated, but the gas was ethane, whose molecule is regarded as a union of two methyl groups, $CH_3{\cdot}CH_3$.

methyl acetate. Chem. A colorless, fragrant liquid, $CH_3CO_2CH_3$, occurring in crude wood vinegar and wood spirit, and also made from methyl alcohol and acetic acid.

meth'yl-al (mĕth'ĭl-ăl), n. [*methyl*ene + aldehyde.] Org. Chem. A light, volatile liquid, $H_2C(OCH_3)_2$, of a pleasant ethereal odor, obtained by partial oxidation of methyl alcohol ; — called also formal. It is used in medicine as a hypnotic and in organic chemistry as a synthetic agent.

methyl alcohol. Chem. A light, volatile, inflammable liquid, CH_3OH, boiling at 66° C. (151° F.), obtained by the distillation of wood and in other ways ; — called also wood alcohol, wood spirit, pyroligneous spirit, carbinol, etc. It is like ordinary or ethyl alcohol in many of its properties, and is hence widely used as a solvent and in lamps. It is also used in chemical manufacture and in denaturing ordinary alcohol. Unless specially purified it has a foul odor, and in any state is a dangerous poison, causing not only intoxication, but blindness, coma, and often death.

meth'yl-am'ine (mĕth'ĭl-ăm'ĭn ; -ē-mēn' ; 184), n., or methyl amine. Also -min. Chem. A compound formed by the replacement by methyl of one or more hydrogen atoms in ammonia ; specif., a colorless, inflammable gas, CH_3NH_2, of strong ammoniacal odor, obtained from herring brine, from certain euphorbiaceous plants, by dry distillation of bones, wood, etc., by treating acetamide with bromine and caustic soda, and by other methods. At 12° C. (53.6° F.) 1,150 volumes of the gas dissolve in one volume of water. Its aqueous solutions are more strongly alkaline than those of ammonia.

meth'yl-an'i-line (-ăn'ĭ-lĭn ; -lēn ; 184), n., or methyl aniline. Also -lin. Org. Chem. A colorless oil, $C_6H_5NHCH_3$, boiling at 193.5° C. (380.3° F.), derived from aniline by the replacement of one ammoniacal hydrogen atom with methyl. It is used in the manufacture of certain dyes.

meth'yl-an'thra-cene (-ăn'thrā-sēn), n., or methyl anthracene. Org. Chem. A hydrocarbon, $C_{15}H_{12}$, derived from anthracene by the replacement of a hydrogen atom by methyl. Specif., 2-methyl-anthraceno, a yellowish or white crystalline substance occurring in coal tar, and used in the manufacture of certain dyes.

meth'yl-ate (mĕth'ĭl-āt), n. [methyl + alcohol*ate.*] Chem. A compound derived from methyl alcohol by the replacement of the hydroxyl hydrogen by a metal ; a methyl alcoholate ; as, sodium methylate, CH_3ONa ; — less commonly, but perhaps preferably, called methoxide, as being a binary compound of methoxyl.

meth'yl-ate (-āt), v. t. ; -AT'ED (-āt'ĕd) ; -AT'ING (-āt'ĭng).

1. To impregnate or mix with methyl alcohol.

2. Chem. To treat in such a way as to introduce one or more methyl groups, CH_3.

methylated spirit, ordinary, or ethyl, alcohol denatured with methyl alcohol, of which, under the law of Great Britain, it must contain at least ten per cent. See DENATURE, v. t. — meth'yl-a'tor (-ā'tĕr), n.

methyl chloride. Chem. A colorless, sweet-smelling gas, CH_3Cl, obtained by action of hydrochloric acid on methyl alcohol. It is easily liquefied by cold or pressure, and is used as a refrigerant and local anesthetic.

meth'yl-ene (mĕth'ĭl-ēn), n. [F. méthylène, from Gr. μέθυ wine + ὕλη wood ; — a word coined to correspond to the name wood spirit.] Org. Chem. A bivalent hydrocarbon radical, CH_2, not known in the free state, but conveniently regarded as a component of various compounds ; as, methylene bromide, CH_2Br_2.

methylene blue. Chem. An important blue dyestuff, usually sold in the form of a double compound with zinc chloride (see DYE). It is also used in microscopy as a stain. Nitric acid converts it into methylene green.

methylene iodide. Org. Chem. A yellowish liquid, CH_2I_2, remarkable for its high percentage (94.9) of iodine and its high specific gravity (3.285 at 15° C. or 59° F.), and used as a heavy liquid for separating minerals and determining specific gravities.

meth'yl-en'i-tan (mĕth'ĭl-ĕn'ĭ-tăn), n. [G. ; dioxy*methylen* + mann*itan* ; from its resemblance to mannitan.] Org. Chem. A yellow, sirupy substance first obtained in 1861 by heating trioxymsthylene with lime water. It is a mixture of compounds belonging to the sugar group, and was the first of such compounds artificially produced.

methyl ether. Org. Chem. a A colorless, easily condensable gas, $(CH_3)_2O$, of agreeable odor, obtained by heating methyl alcohol with sulphuric acid, a process analogous to that for preparing ordinary, or ethyl, ether ; — called also methyl oxide. b A methyl ester.

methyl glycocoll. Org. Chem. Sarcosine.

methyl green. A green rosaniline dyestuff, formerly important in cotton dyeing and calico printing, formed by methyl chloride acting on methyl violet. It is still used in dyeing, and in microscopy as a stain for fresh tissues.

meth'yl-lep'si-a (mĕth'ĭl-lĕp'sĭ-ă), n. [NL. ; Gr. μέθυ strong drink + -lepsia.] Med. Paroxysmal desire for alcoholic liquor.

me-think', me-think'eth. Obs. equivs. of METHINKS.

meth-i'on-ate (mē-thī'ŏ-n-āt), n. A salt of methionic acid.

meth'o-deu'tic (mĕth'ō-dū'tĭk), n. [Gr. μεθοδευτικός regular.] = METHODOLOGY.

Meth'od-ies (mĕth'ŭd-ĭz), n., pl. of METHODY. [obs.]

Meth'od-ist-ry (-ĭs-trĭ), a. Methodistic.

Meth'od-ize, v. i. To talk or act as a Methodist ; to incline to Methodism ; to turn Methodist.

meth'od-iz'er (-īz'ẽr), n. One who methodizes.

meth'od-less, a. Without method : unmethodical.

me-thought' (mē-thôt'), pret. of METHINKS. [METHOUGHT.]

me-thoughts'. Obs. equiv. of methought (mē-thôt'), pret. of METHINKS. [METHOUGHT.]

meth-ox'ide (mĕth-ŏk'sīd ; -sĭd ; 184), n. Also -id. Chem. See METHYLATE.

meth'ri-date. † METHRIDATE.

meth'yle (mĕth'ĭl). † METHYL.

Me-thu'sa-el (mē-thū'zā-ĕl), Me-thu'sha-el (-shā-ĕl). Bib.

Me-thu'se-lem (-sē-lĕm). Corrupt. of METHUSELAH (after Jerusalem). Obs. or Vulgar.

Me-thu'se-lah (-sē-lă), n. One of the patriarchs, who is related (Gen. v. 27) to have lived 969 years ; hence, a very old man.

meth'y (mĕth'ĭ), n. [From a Cree dialect ; cf. Cree mihyey.] The burbot Lota maculosa. Local, U. S. [maldehyde.]

methyl aldehyde. Chem. For-methyl benzene. Chem. Toluene.

methyl blue. Blue dyestuff, a sulphonic derivative of rosaniline.

methylene violet. A reddish violet dyestuff of the safranine group produced by action of a mixture of xylidines on a nitroso derivative of dimethyl aniline.

meth'yl-eth'yl-a-ce'tic (mĕth'ĭl-ĕth'ĭl-ă-sē'tĭk ; -sēt'ĭk), a.

me-thyl'ic (mĕ-thĭl'ĭk), a. Chem. Of, pert. to, or derived from, methyl; as, methylic alcohol. See METHYL ALCOHOL, etc.

methyl iodide. Org. Chem. A heavy liquid, CH_3I, prepared by heating methyl alcohol with iodine and phosphorus. It is used as a reagent in organic chemistry.

methyl naphtalene. Org. Chem. Either of two isomeric hydrocarbons, $C_{10}H_7{\cdot}CH_3$, occurring in coal tar. One, α-methyl naphthalene, is a colorless liquid, while the β compound is a white solid resembling naphthalene. Both boil at about the same point (242° C. or 467° F.).

methyl orange. An azo dyestuff derived from dimethylaniline. It dyes silk and wool a fiery orange, but is used chiefly as an indicator in alkalimetry, its dilute solution being yellow when neutral and pink when acid. It is not altered by carbon dioxide. Called also helianthin, orange III, etc.

methyl salicylate. Chem. The methyl ester of salicylic acid, $C_6H_4(OH)CO_2CH_3$, the chief constituent of oil of wintergreen and an ingredient of many other essential oils.

methyl violet. Any of a series of commercial dyestuffs chiefly mixtures of methylated rosanilines. The shade varies from reddish to bluish with increasing methylation, the bluest grade having six methyl groups and designated as methyl violet 6 B. Similarly, the reddish shades are indicated by the marks R, 2R, etc. They are also used in medicine as antiseptics and in microscopy as stains.

met'ic (mĕt'ĭk ; 277), n. [Gr. μέτοικος, prop., changing one's abode ; μετά, indicating change + οἶκος house, abode: cf. L. metoecus, F. métèque.] Gr. Antiq. A settler ; an immigrant ; specif., at Athens, an alien resident in Attica, who had some privileges of a citizen. Cf. ISOTELY.

me-tic'u-los'i-ty (mĕ-tĭk'ū-lŏs'ĭ-tĭ), n. Quality of being meticulous.

me-tic'u-lous (mĕ-tĭk'ū-lŭs), a. [L. meticulosus, fr. metus fear : cf. F. méticuleux.] 1. Timid ; fearful. Obs. 2. Unduly or excessively careful of small details or about comparatively unimportant matters ; finically scrupulous.

The excessive and meticulous civility of Addison. E. Gosse.

Syn. — See CAREFUL.

‖ mé'tier (mā'tyā'), n. [F.] Calling ; profession ; business ; trade ; line.

Not only is it the business of no one to preach the truth, but it is the métier of many to conceal it. A. R. Colquhoun.

me'tol (mē'tŏl ; -tōl), n. [G. ; trade name, fr. meta- + kresol cresol.] A whitish soluble powder used as a developer in photography. Chemically, it is the sulphate of methyl-p-amino-m-cresol.

Me-ton'ic (mē-tŏn'ĭk), a. Pertaining to, or discovered by, Meton, the Athenian astronomer of the 5th century B. C. He is chiefly notable for introducing the Metonic cycle, a period of 19 years, after the lapse of which the new and full moon returns to the same day of the year. The calendars of all the nations of modern Europe are based on this cycle. Cf. CALLIPPIC.

met'o-nym (mĕt'ō-nĭm), n. A word used in metonymy.

met'o-nym'ic (-nĭm'ĭk) } a. [See METONYMY.] Pert. to, met'o-nym'i-cal (-ĭ-kăl) } or involving, metonymy ; used in metonymy. — met'o-nym'i-cal-ly, adv.

me-ton'y-my (mē-tŏn'ĭ-mĭ), n. [L. metonymia, Gr. μετωνυμία ; μετά, indicating change + ὄνυμα, ὄνομα, name. See NAME.] Rhet. A trope in which one word is put for another that it suggests ; as, we say, a man keeps a good table instead of good food ; we read Vergil, that is, his poems ; a man has a warm heart, that is, warm affections.

Syn. — METONYMY, SYNECDOCHE alike involve the substitution for one idea of another closely allied to it. The technical distinction between the two, which may be seen in the defs., is now little noted, and the tendency now is to allow metonymy to do duty for both. Cf. COMPARISON.

met'o-pe (mĕt'ō-pē), n. [L. metopa, Gr. μετόπη ; μετά with, between + ὀπή opening, hole, the hole in the frieze between the beam ends.] Arch. The space between two triglyphs of the Doric frieze, which, among the ancients, was often adorned with carved work. See ORDER, Illust.

Me-to'pi-as (mē-tō'pĭ-ăs), n. [NL., fr. Gr. μετωπίας having a broad forehead, fr. μέτωπον forehead.] Zoöl. A genus of large labyrinthodonts from the Keuper formation (Triassic) of Germany, having a rather weak dentition with but slight internal folding of the enamel, and very large pectoral bony plates.

me-top'ic (mē-tŏp'ĭk), a. [Gr. μέτωπον the forehead.] Anat. Of or pertaining to the forehead ; frontal. —metopic suture, Anat., the frontal suture.

me-top'pi-on (mē-tŏp'ĭ-ŏn), n. [NL., fr. Gr. μετώπιον forehead.] Craniom. A point situated midway between the frontal prominences. See CRANIOMETRY, Illust.

met'o-po-scop'ic (mĕt'ō-pō-skŏp'ĭk) } a. Of or pert. to met'o-po-scop'i-cal (-skŏp'ĭ-kăl) } metoposcopy.

met'o-pos'co-py (-pŏs'kō-pĭ), n. [Gr. μετωποσκοπία observing the forehead ; μέτωπον the forehead + σκοπός a watcher : cf. F. métoposcopie.] Study of physiognomy ; art of discovering character by the features, or lines of the face. — met'o-pos'co-pist (mĕt'ō-pŏs'kō-pĭst), n.

met'rec-to'pi-a (mĕt'rĕk-tō'pĭ-ă) } n. [NL. metrectopia. me-trec'to-py (mē-trĕk'tŏ-pĭ) } See METRO-; ECTOPIA.] Med. Displacement of the uterus. — met'rec-top'ic (mĕt'rĕk-tŏp'ĭk), a.

met'ric (mĕt'rĭk), a. [L. metricus, Gr. μετρικός : cf. F. métrique. See METER rhythm.] 1. Relating to measurement ; involving, or proceeding by, measurement.

2. [F. métrique.] Of or pertaining to the meter as a standard of measurement, or pertaining to the decimal system of measurement of which the meter is the basis.

3. = METRICAL, 1.

metric geometry, geometry that introduces the axioms of distance and thence determines the size of geometrical magnitudes, as lengths, areas, volumes, angles. See DISTANCE. — m. system, a decimal system of weights and measures originating in France at the close of the 18th century, the use of which is now required by law in the majority of nations and permitted in most of the others, including the United States and England. The basis is the meter, which was intended to be, and is very nearly, one ten-millionth part of the distance measured on a meridian of the earth from the equator to the pole, being equal to about 39.37 inches, or 3 feet 3⅜ inches. Speaking accurately, a meter is the distance between two lines on a certain platinum bar kept in Paris, when this bar is at 0° C. or 32° F. The English Board of Trade value is 39.370113 inches. In the United States the accepted value is 39.37 inches. Copies of the Paris meter are kept elsewhere, and its value in wave lengths of light is also known with very great exactness. Upon the meter are based the other primary units : the square meter, the cubic meter, or stere, the are (100 square meters), the liter (the volume of a cube whose edge is one tenth of a meter), and the gram (the weight, very nearly, of distilled water at 4° C. contained in a cube whose edge is one hundredth of a meter). Successive multiples of the primary units are designated by the Greek prefixes deca-, hecto-, kilo-, myria- ; successive parts by the Latin prefixes deci-, centi-, and milli-. See Tables. The prefixes mega- and micro- are sometimes used to denote a multiple by one million, and the millionth part, respectively.

met'ri-cal (mĕt'rĭ-kăl), a. 1. Of or pert. to meter ; arranged in meter ; as, metrical compositions.

2. = METRIC, 1, 2.

me-tri'cian (mē-trĭsh'ăn), n. [Cf. F. métricien. See METER rhythm.] A composer in, or student of, meter ; a metrist.

met'ri-fi-ca'tion (mĕt'rĭ-fĭ-kā'shŭn), n. Composition in metrical form ; versification. Rare. Tennyson.

met'ri-fy (mĕt'rĭ-fī), v. t. ; -FIED (-fīd) ; -FYING (-fī'ĭng). [L. metrum meter + -fy : cf. F. métrifier.] To compose in, or put into, meter ; to make a metrical version of.

me'trist (mē'trĭst ; mĕt'rĭst ; 277), n. [LL. metrista.] A maker of verses ; also, one skillful in making verses or handling meter ; a metrician.

Spenser was no mere metrist, but a great composer. Lowell.

me-tri'tis (mē-trī'tĭs), n. [NL. ; metro- + -itis.] Med. Inflammation of the womb.

me'tro- (mē'trō- ; mĕt'rō-), metr-. A combining form from Greek μήτρα, uterus, womb.

me'tro-cele (mē'trō-sēl ; mĕt'rō-), n. [metro- + -cele.] Med. Hernia of the uterus.

me'tro-col'po-cele (-kŏl'pō-sēl), n. [metro- + colpocele.] Med. Hernial protrusion of the uterus into the vagina.

me-trol'o-gy (mē-trŏl'ō-jĭ), n. [Gr. μέτρον measure + -logy.] The science of, or a system of, weights and measures ; also, a treatise on the subject. — met'ro-log'i-cal (mĕt'rō-lŏj'ĭ-kăl), a. — me-trol'o-gist (mē-trŏl'ō-jĭst), n. — met'ro-logue (mĕt'rō-lŏg), n.

See MICRO-; COCCUS.] Bacteriol. A large genus of nonciliated bacteria of the family Coccaceæ, distinguished by the cell division proceeding in two directions of space. Among the pathogenic species is M. pyogenes, occurring in numerous forms on the skin, and one of the causative agents of suppuration, being commonly called staphylococcus. Numerous harmless species are found in the air and in water. Also [l. c.], an individual organism of this genus. — mi'cro-coc-col'o-gist (-krŏk-ŏl'ə-jĭst), n.

mi'cro-cosm (mī'krō-kŏz'm ; 277), n. [F. microcosme, L. microcosmus, fr. Gr. mikrós kósmos, lit., little world. The Gr. phrase = man.] 1. A little world ; a miniature universe. Hence : a Man, or human nature as a supposed epitome of the exterior universe or great world ; — opposed to macrocosm. Shak. b The body. Humorous. c A community, institution, town, district, country, etc., regarded as an epitome of the world or as being a little world. d In the 18th century, a traveling mechanical show. e A representation in miniature or on a small scale.

2. Alchemy. The philosopher's stone. Obs.

mich. Obs. or dial. var. of MICHE, v. i. [MUCH.]

mich. Obs. or dial. Eng. var. of Mich. Abbr Michael; Michaelmas; Michigan.

Mich'a-ha (mĭch'ə-hô), Mich'a-hou (-hoo), = NAHANBOZO.

Michael. Cousin. See COUSIN MICHAEL.

Mi'chael-an'ge-lesque'. Var. of MICHELANGELESQUE.

Michaelmas blackbird. The ring ouzel. Local, Eng.

Michaelmas crocus. The autumn crocus. Dial. Eng.

Michaelmas daisy. Any of various American asters, as the heath aster, the New England aster, etc. Eng.

Michaelmas Day. Michaelmas.

Michaelmas eve. The evening preceding Michaelmas.

Michaelmas sitting or term. Law. See TERM.

Michaelmas spring. An autumnal spring. Cf. INDIAN SUMMER.

Michaelmas tide. The season of Michaelmas.

Mi'chah (mī'kə). Bib. Var. of MICAH.

Mi-cha'ia (mĭ-kā'yə ; mĭ-kī'-ə).

Mi'chal (mī'kăl), n. Bib. Saul's daughter, wife of David.

michall + MECHALL.

michare. + MICHER. [Obs.]

miche, n. [F.] A loaf of bread.

miche, v. i. [See MICHE to lie hid.] To pilfer. Obs.

Mi-che'a (mĭ-kē'ə). D Bib.

michel, Michelgemote, etc. + MICKLE, MICKLEGEMOTE.

Mi'chel-an'ge-lism (mī'kĕl-ăn'jĕ-lĭz'm), n. See -ISM.

mich'er (mĭch'ĕr ; mēch'ĕr), n. [ME. michare, mucharе. See MICHE, v. i.] One who miches; a truant, sneak, thief, pander, etc. Obs. or Dial.

Mich'i-gan'der (mĭch'ĭ-găn'dĕr), n. A native or inhabitant of Michigan. Colloq. [LING. 1.]

Michigan grayling. See GRAYLING.

Michigan herring. The cisco (Argyrosomus artedi).

mich'ing (mĭch'ĭng ; mēch'ĭng), p. a. & v. n. Hiding; skulking; pilfering; truant-playing. Obs. or Dial. — miching mallicho (mallecho), a phrase in Shakespeare's "Hamlet" (III. ii. 146) of uncertain origin and meaning, usually understood to mean hiding, or skulking, mischief.

Mich'mas (mĭk'məs), or Mich'maash (-măsh). Bib. [Bib.] micht. Obs. 2d pers. sing. pres. indic. and 1st & 3d pers. sing. pret. of MAY.

Mich'me-thah (mĭk'mē-thä). Mich'ri (mĭk'rĭ). Bib.

Michs. Abbr. Michaelmas.

Mich'tam (mĭk'tăm). Bib [Heb.] A term, of uncertain meaning, in the heading of several psalms (Pss. lvi.–lx.).

michty (mĭk'tĭ). Obs. or Scot. mick (mĭk), n. [From MICHAEL.] An Irishman. Jocose or Contemptuous.

mick'le (mĭk'l), n. a Large-ness ; size. Obs. b A great amount or sum: Archaic or Dial. — mick'le, adv. Obs., Archaic, or Dial.

mick'le, v. t. [AS. micelian, mycelian.] To enlarge; increase. Obs. [Obs.] mick'le-dom, n. Mickleness.

mickle hammer. A kind of hammer for spalling stone.

mick'le-hede, n. [mickle + -hede (-head).] Individual greatness. Obs.

Mick'le-mote' (mĭk'l'l-mō t'), Mick'le-ge-mote' (-gē-mōt'), n. [AS. micel gemōt, mycel gemōt.] A.-S. Hist. The great, or national, genmot. [or Dial.]

mick'le-ter'o, n. [See MICKLE ; TURN.] A.-S. Hist. A view of frankpledge for a whole borough or town.

mick'le-wame', n. [mickle + wame.] Stomach, esp. of a bovine animal. Obs. or Dial.

mick'y (mĭk'ĭ), n. Corruption of MINGI. Australia.

mick'y, n. Slang or Contemptuous. 1. An Irishman; a "mick." U. S. [Ia.]

2. A young wild bull. Austra-

Mi-co'ni-a (mĭ-kō'nĭ-ə), n. [NL., after D. Micón, a Spanish physician.] Syn. of TAMONEA.

mi'cra-cous'tic (mī'krə-kōō'stĭk ; -kous'tĭk), a. [Cf. F. micracoustique.] Pert. or suited to audition of small sounds. — n. A micracoustic instrument. Obs.

mi'cran-thro'pos (mī'krăn-thrō'pŏs), n. [NL. ; micro- + Gr. ánthrōpos man.] A miniature or epitome of man. Coleridge.

Mi'cras'ter (mī'krăs'tĕr), n. [NL. ; micro- + Gr. astēr, star.] Paleon. A genus of spatangoid sea urchins, abounding in the chalk formations ; — so called from the starlike disposal of the ambulacral furrows.

mi'cro, n. Any very small insect, esp. a microlepidopteran.

mi'cro-au'di-phone, n. An instrument for making perceptible very slight sounds.

mi'cro-bal (mī'krō-băl ; mī'krō-bəl), n. Microbial.

mi'cro-bi-ol'o-gy (-bī-ŏl'ə-jĭ), n. [microbion + -logy.] Biol. The science of microörganisms. — mi'cro-bi'o-log'i-cal (-bī'ō-lŏj'ĭ-kəl), a. — mi'cro-bi-ol'o-gist (-ŏl'ə-jĭst), n.

mi'cro-car'pous, a. [micro- + carpous.] Small-fruited. Rare.

Mi'cro-ce'bus (mī'krō-sē'bŭs), n [NL. ; micro- + Gr. kēbos a long-tailed monkey.] Zoöl. A genus of Madagascar lemurs of the subfamily Galagininæ consisting of the dwarf lemurs.

mi'cro-cel'la-lar, a. See MICRO-CENTROLE.

mi'cro-cen'tro-some', n. = mi'cro-ceph'al (mī'krō-sĕf'əl), n. A microcephalic person.

mi'cro-ceph'a-li (-sĕf'ə-lī), n. pl. [NL.] Microcephalic persons.

Mi'cro-cha'ta (mī'krō-kā'tə), n. [NL. ; micro- + Gr. chaítē mane.] Zoöl. A genus of earthworms. M. rappi of South Africa reaches a length of five feet and is probably the largest known earthworm.

mi'cro-char'ac-ter, n. Biol. A minute character requiring the microscope for recognition.

mi'cro-coast, n. A small coast ; with a play on microcosm. Nonce Use. Swift.

mi'cro-coc'cal (mī'krō-kŏk'əl), a. Bacteriol. Pertaining to, or caused by, micrococci.

Mi'cro-co'le-op'ter-a, n. pl. [NL.] A collective name (not indicating any natural group) for the smaller beetles. [CRO-] mi'cro-co-lum'nar, a. See MImi'cro-co-nid'i-um, n. Bot. A conidium of small size as contrasted with other conidia produced by the same species.

mi'cro-con-stit'u-ent, n. A microscopic constituent.

mī'cro-cos'mic (mī'krō-kŏz'mĭk) } a. [Cf. F. microcosmique.] mī'cro-cos'mi-cal (-mĭ-kăl) }
1. Of, pert. to, or of the nature of, a microcosm. — microcosmic salt, Chem., a white salt, $HNaNH_4PO_4{\cdot}4H_2O$, best obtained by mixing solutions of sodium phosphate and ammonium phosphate or chloride. Chemically, it is hydrogen sodium ammonium phosphate. It is changed to glassy sodium metaphosphate on heating, and hence is used in place of borax as a blowpipe reagent in testing for metallic oxides. It was originally obtained from human urine, and called sal microcosmicum.

mī'cro-cou-lomb' (-kōō-lŏm'), n. Elec. A unit, the millionth part of one coulomb.

mī'cro-cryp'to-crys'tal-line (-krĭp'tō-krĭs'tăl-ĭn ; -ĭn), a. Petrog. Having the constituent grains invisible by the microscope individually, but recognizable by their aggregate effect on polarized light.

mī'cro-crys'tal-line (-krĭs'tăl-ĭn ; -ĭn), a. Petrog. Having the constituent crystalline grains visible by the microscope but not by the unaided eye.

mī'cro-cyte (mī'krō-sīt), n. [micro- + -cyte.] Anat. One of the small disks resembling in color the red corpuscles, but of one third or one half the size, which occur in blood (in especially large numbers in certain forms of anæmia).

mī'cro-cy-thæ'mi-a } (-sī-thē'mĭ-ȧ), n. [NL. See MICRO- and CYTE ; -EMIA.] Med. The presence mī'cro-cy-the'mi-a } of microcytes in the blood.

mī'cro-cy-to'sis (-sī-tō'sĭs), n. [NL.] Med. Production of microcytes or of microcythæmia.

mī'cro-dont (mī'krō-dŏnt), a. [micro- + -odont.] Having small teeth. See DENTAL INDEX. — mī'cro-dont-ism (-ĭz'm), n.

mī'cro-far'ad (-făr'ăd), n. Elec. The millionth part of a farad, used because of its convenient size instead of the farad as a unit of capacity.

Mī'cro-ga'dus (-gā'dŭs), n. [NL. ; micro- + Gadus.] Zoöl. A genus of gadoid fishes consisting of the tomcods.

mī'cro-gal'va-nom'e-ter (-găl'vȧ-nŏm'ē-tẽr), n. A form of reflecting galvanometer to measure very weak currents.

mī'cro-glos'si-a (-glŏs'ĭ-ȧ), n. [NL. See MICRO- ; GLOSSA.] Med. Abnormal smallness of the tongue.

mī'crog-nath'ĭ-a (mī'krŏg-năth'ĭ-ȧ), n. [NL. ; micro- + Gr. γνάθος jaw.] Med. Abnormal smallness of the jaws.

mī'cro-gram (mī'krō-grăm), n. [micro- + gram.] Physics. A unit equal to one millionth of a gram ; — sometimes used when the gram is an inconveniently large standard.

mī'cro-graph (mī'krō-grăf), n. [See MICROGRAPHY.] 1. An instrument for executing minute writing or engraving.
2. A picture of an object as seen through the microscope. When it is a photograph, it is, properly, a microphotograph, but the distinction is not always observed.

mī-crog'ra-pher (mī-krŏg'rȧ-fẽr), n. A specialist in micrography.

mī'cro-graph'ic (mī'krō-grăf'ĭk), a. 1. Of or pertaining to micrography ; minutely written.
2. Related to, or disclosed by, microscopic examination, and exhibited, or exhibitable, in drawings or photographs.
3. Petrog. Graphic on a scale so small as to be visible only under the microscope ; micropegmatitic. See GRAPHIC.

mī-crog'ra-phy (mī-krŏg'rȧ-fĭ), n. [micro- + -graphy.]
1. Description of microscopic objects.
2. Art or practice of very minute handwriting. It is sometimes a symptom of nervous disorder.

mī'crohm (mī'krōm ; mĭ-krōm'), n. [micro- + ohm.] Elec. A unit of resistance equal to one millionth of an ohm.

mī-crohm'me-ter (mī-krōm'mē-tẽr), n. Elec. A sensitive kind of ohmmeter for measuring very small resistances.

Mī'cro-lep'i-dop'ter-a (mī'krō-lĕp'ĭ-dŏp'tẽr-ȧ), n. pl. [NL. See MICRO- ; LEPIDOPTERA.] Zoöl. The smaller moths, collectively, including members of several families, as the Tineidæ, Tortricidæ, Pyralidæ, and Pteriophoridæ. The term does not represent a natural group, and is used merely for convenience. — mī'cro-lep'i-dop'ter-an (-ăn), a. & n. — mī'cro-lep'i-dop'ter-ous (-ŭs), a.

mī'cro-lite (mī'krō-līt), n. [micro- + -lite.] 1. Petrog. A minute crystal, visible only under the microscope, usually affecting polarized light and often referable to some mineral species. Microlites generally appear in the form of rods or needles, either singly or grouped.
2. Min. A mineral occurring usually in very small isometric crystals of yellow or brown color and resinous luster. It is essentially calcium pyrotantalate, $Ca_2Ta_2O_7$. H., 5.5. Sp. gr., 5.5–6.1.

mī'cro-li'ter } (mī'krō-lē'tẽr), n. [micro- + liter, litre.] mī'cro-li'tre } One millionth of a liter.

mī'cro-lit'ic (-lĭt'ĭk), a. Petrog. Of or pertaining to, or composed of, microlites.

mī'cro-log'ic (-lŏj'ĭk) } a. Of or pertaining to microl-mī'cro-log'i-cal (-l-kăl) } ogy ; very minute ; as, micrologic examination. — mī'cro-log'i-cal-ly, adv.

mī-crol'o-gy (mī-krŏl'ō-jĭ), n. [micro- + -logy.] Attention to, or discussion of, petty items or differences.

mī'cro-mere (mī'krō-mēr), n. [micro- + -mere.] Embryol. One of the smaller cells or blastomeres due to the unequal segmentation of an egg. — mī'cro-me'ral (-mē'răl), a.

Mī'cro-me'ri-a (-mē'rĭ-ȧ), n. [NL. See MICRO- ; -MERE.] Bot. A large genus of fragrant menthaceous chiefly Old World herbs having a calyx mostly 13-nerved, a small and scarcely exserted corolla, and four unequal anthers. M. douglasii occurs in California.

mī'cro-me-rit'ic (mī'krō-mē-rĭt'ĭk), a. [micro- + Gr. μέρος part + -itic + -ic.] Granitic, with grains so small as to be invisible without the microscope ; — opposed to macromeritic.

mī'cro-met'al-lur'gy (-mĕt'ăl-ûr'jĭ), n. That part of the science of metallurgy which deals with the composition and structure of metals or metallic compounds as discovered by microscopic examination.

mī-crom'e-ter (mī-krŏm'ē-tẽr), n. [micro- + -meter : cf. F. micromètre.] a An instrument, used with a telescope or microscope, for measuring minute distances, or the apparent diameters of objects which subtend minute angles. The measurement given directly is that of the image of the object formed at the focus of the object glass. b Short for MICROMETER CALIPER, etc.

micrometer caliper, calipers (or calli-, gauge or gage. Called also micrometer. Mech. A caliper gauge with micrometer screw attached, used for very exact measurement. It is often made to measure to .0001 inch.

Micrometer Caliper. a a a Frame ; b Anvil ; c Movable Spindle ; d Sleeve ; e Thimble. A complete rotation of e moves c .025 inch. The beveled edge of e is divided into 25 parts, so that to turn e by the length of one of these parts moves c .001 inch. By means of a vernier scale (not shown) on d .0001 inch can be measured.

micrometer screw. A screw with a graduated head and fine threads used in micrometers, etc.

mī'cro-met'ric (mī'krō-mĕt'rĭk) } a. [Cf. F. micromé- mī'cro-met'ri-cal (-mĕt'rĭ-kăl) } trique.] Pert. to, or made by, the micrometer. — mī'cro-met'ri-cal-ly, adv.

mī-crom'e-try (mī-krŏm'ē-trĭ), n. Art of measuring with a micrometer.

mī'cro-mil'li-me'ter, -me'tre (mī'krō-mĭl'ĭ-mē'tẽr), n. [micro- + millimeter.] The millionth part of a millimeter ; also, sometimes, as in Biol., a micron, or thousandth of a millimeter ; — called also mī'cro-mil. Symbol, μμ.

mī'cro-min'er-al'o-gy (-mĭn'ẽr-ăl'ō-jĭ), n. Microscopic mineralogy. — mī'cro-min'er-al-og'i-cal (-ăl-ŏj'ĭ-kăl), a.

mī'cron (mī'krŏn ; mĭ'krŏn), n. [NL., fr. Gr. μικρός small.] A unit of length, the thousandth part of one millimeter, or the millionth of a meter. Symbol, μ.

Mī'cro-ne'sian (mī'krō-nē'shăn ; -zhăn), a. [From Micronesia, fr. Gr. μικρός small + νῆσος an island.] Of or pertaining to Micronesia or the Micronesians ; also, designating, or belonging to, the division of the Malayo-Polynesian languages (which see) spoken in Micronesia.

Mī'cro-ne'sian, n. A native of Micronesia, which is inhabited by a variety of peoples mostly of mixed Melanesian, Polynesian, and Malaysian stocks. The types vary from the almost Polynesian people of the Gilbert Islands to the Malayan people of the Ladrones. Usually the Micronesians are shorter, darker, and more hairy than the Polynesians, and differ in culture and usage. They speak Malayo-Polynesian dialects. Also, a Micronesian language or dialect.

mī'cro-nom'e-ter (-nŏm'ē-tẽr), n. [micro- + chronometer.] An instrument for noting minute portions of time.

mī'cro-nu'cle-us (-nū'klē-ŭs), n. ; L. pl. -CLEI (-ī). Zoöl. In many ciliate infusorians, a small nucleus situated near to, but distinct from, the chief nucleus (macronucleus). It is most commonly concerned in conjugation and mitosis. More than one micronucleus is present in many forms. — mī'cro-nu'cle-ar (mī'krō-nū'klē-ăr), a.

mī'cro-per'thite (-pûr'thīt), n. Petrog. Perthite on a minute scale, common in rocks, esp. granite and gneiss. See PERTHITE. — mī'cro-per-thit'ic (-pẽr-thĭt'ĭk), a.

mī'cro-phone (mī'krō-fōn), n. [micro- + Gr. φωνή sound, voice.] Physics. An instrument for intensifying feeble sounds or for transmitting sounds, based on the principle that the transition resistance between loosely joined electric conductors decreases in proportion as they are pressed together. The conductors form part of a circuit through which a current is passing, and the variations in pressure due to sound waves in the vicinity of the conductors produce variations of resistance, and hence fluctuations of the current, by which the sounds are reproduced in a telephone receiver. The transmitter of the modern telephone is essentially a microphone, the pressure of the sound waves being communicated to the conductors by means of a diaphragm. In the Blake transmitter the conductors consist of a small piece of platinum pressing against a carbon button ; in the Crossley transmitter four carbon pencils (appropriately connected) are in contact with four carbon blocks ; in the Ader transmitter twelve such carbon contacts are used ; while the long-distance transmitter has a cylindrical box nearly filled with carbon granules, thus securing a great number of contacts. The last form is also increasingly used on local circuits.

mī'cro-phon'ic (-fŏn'ĭk), a. Of or pert. to a microphone ; serving to intensify weak sounds ; micracoustic.

mī'cro-phon'ics (-ĭks), n. [See MICROPHONE.] The science which treats of the microphone or of the means of increasing the intensity of low or weak sounds.

mī'cro-pho'no-graph (-fō'nō-grăf), n. A special phonograph for the recording and reproduction of faint sounds.

mī'cro-pho'to-graph (mī'krō-fō'tō-grăf), n. [micro- + photograph.] 1. A microscopically small photograph of a picture, writing, printed page, etc.
2. = PHOTOMICROGRAPH, 1.

mī'cro-pho-tog'ra-phy (-fō-tŏg'rȧ-fĭ), n. The art or science of making microphotographs. — mī'cro-pho'to-graph'ic (-fō'tō-grăf'ĭk), a.

mī'cro-pho'to-scope (-fō'tō-skōp), n. [microphotograph + -scope.] A portable optical instrument for examining microphotographs, esp. minute maps.

mī'croph-thal'mi-a (mī'krŏf-thăl'mĭ-ȧ), n. Also mī'croph-thal'my (mī'krŏf-thăl'mĭ). [NL. microphthalmia ; micro- + Gr. ὀφθαλμός eye.] Med. An unnatural smallness of the eyes, occurring as the result of disease or of imperfect development. — mī'croph-thal'mic (-mĭk), a.

mī-cro'pi-a (mī-krō'pĭ-ȧ), n. [NL. See MICRO- ; -OPIA.] Med. Abnormity of vision in which objects appear smaller than they really are ; micropsia ; — opposed to macropia.

mī'cro-po-lar'i-scope (mī'krō-pō-lăr'ĭ-skōp), n. Optics. A polarizing microscope ; that is, a microscope with polarizer and analyzer attached, as for use in crystallography.

mī'cro-pore (mī'krō-pōr ; 201), n. Zoöl. One of the small pores in the shell of some chitons, containing a minute sense organ. Cf. MEGALOPORE.

mī'cró-por'phy-rĭt'ic (-pôr'fĭ-rĭt'ĭk), a. Petrog. Porphyritic on a minute scale, visible only under the microscope.

mī-crop'ter-ism (mī-krŏp'tẽr-ĭz'm), n. [See MICROPTEROUS.] Zoöl. The condition of having the wings small or rudimentary and useless for flight.

mī-crop'ter-ous (-ŭs), a. [Gr. μικρόπτερος ; μικρός small + πτερόν wing.] Zoöl. Having small or rudimentary wings or fins.

mī'cro-py'lar (mī'krō-pī'lăr), a. Pert. to a micropyle.

mī'cro-pyle (mī'krō-pīl), n. [micro- + Gr. πύλη gate, orifice : cf. F. micropyle.] 1. Zoöl. a A minute opening, or a group of openings, in the investing membranes of an egg, by which spermatozoa may enter. b The minute opening through which the protoplasmic contents of a gemmule of a sponge escape.
2. Bot. The minute orifice in the integuments of an ovule.

mī'cro-pod (mī'krō-pŏd), n. [F. See MICRO- ; -PHAGOUS.] Anat. A microphagocyte.

mī'cro-pha'go-cyte (-fā'gō-sīt), n. Anat. A small phagocyte ; specif., a leucocyte of the common polymorphonuclear type.

mī'cro-pho'ni-a (mī'krō-fō'nĭ-ȧ), n. [NL. ; Gr. μικροφωνία, μικρός small + φωνή voice.] Med. Weakness of voice.

mī-crof'o-nous (mī-krŏf'ō-nŭs), a. Microphonic.

mī-croph'o-ny (-nĭ), n. = MICROPHONIA.

mī'cro-phyl'line (mī'krō-fĭl'ĭn ; -lēn), a. [See MICROPHYLLOUS.] Bot. Having small leaflike expansions, as certain lichens. Rare.

mī'cro-phyl'lous (mī'krō-fĭl'ŭs), a. [micro- + Gr. φύλλον leaf.] Bot. Small-leaved.

mī'cro-phy-tol'o-gy (-fī-tŏl'ō-jĭ), n. [microphyte + -logy.] The study of microphytes.

mī'cro-pla'si-a (mī'krō-plā'zhĭ-ȧ), n. [NL. ; micro- + -plasia.] Med. Development to a small size only.

mī-crop'o-dous (-dŭs), a. Zoöl. Having a small foot or small feet.

Mī'cro-pod'i-dæ (mī'krō-pŏd'ĭ-dē), n. pl. [NL.] Zoöl. A widely distributed family of fissirostral picarian birds consisting of the swifts. The typical subfamily is Mī'cro-po-dī'næ (-pō-dī'nē). See SWIFT.

mī-crop'si-a (mī-krŏp'sĭ-ȧ), n. Also mī'cro-py (mī'krō-pĭ). [NL.] Med. = MICROPIA.

mī'cro-pter-yg'i-ous (mī'krŏp'tẽr-ĭj'ĭ-ŭs), a. [micro- + Gr. πτερύγιον fin.] Having, or provided with, small fins mī'cro-ra'di-om'e-ter, n. = RADIOMICROMETER.

mī'cro-re'frac-tom'e-ter, n. A refractometer for detecting structural differences in blood corpuscles.

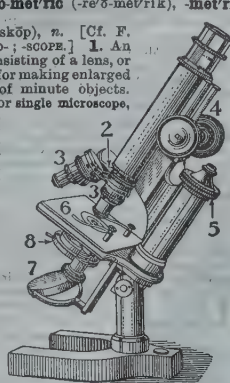
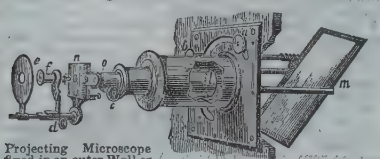
mi/cro-rhe-om/e-ter (mī/krō-rē-ŏm/ē-tĕr), n. Physics. A rheometer for measuring the flow of liquids in capillary tubes. — mi/cro-rhe/o-met/ric (-rē/ō-mĕt/rĭk), -met/ri-cal (-rĭ-kăl), a.

mi/cro-scope (mī/krō-skōp), n. [Cf. F. microscope. See MICRO- ; -SCOPE.] 1. An optical instrument, consisting of a lens, or combination of lenses, for making enlarged or magnified images of minute objects. The simple microscope, or single microscope, consists merely of a single lens or magnifying glass set in a frame, usually adjustable, and often provided with a stand for holding the object to be viewed and a reflecting mirror. In this form of instrument the rays of light which enter the eye proceed directly from the object itself. The compound microscope requires an objective and an eyepiece, commonly mounted in a drawtube, — accurate fo cus, in the case of high-power lenses, being attained by a special screw appliance known as the fine adjustment. The projecting microscope is constructed to throw the magnified image upon a screen in a dark room or box. It has a large lens for converging a beam of sunlight or artificial light upon the object, and a small lens or magnifier. See also ULTRAMICROSCOPE.



Compound Microscope. 1 Eyepiece ; 2 Nosepiece, carrying three Objectives, 3 ; 4 Rack and Pinion for coarse adjustment ; 5 Graduated Head of Screw for Fine Adjustment ; 6 Stage ; 7 Illuminating Mirror ; 8 Condenser.



Projecting Microscope fixed in an outer Wall or Shutter. a Knob for turning the Mirror; b Screw for inclining the Mirror ; m Mirror for reflecting the Sun's Light through the Lenses ; l Principal Condensing Lens at outer End of the smaller Tube ; o Second Condensing Lens, moved by Thumbscrew c ; n Two Metal Plates holding the Object at the Focus of the Lenses ; f Tube containing the Objective Lens, movable by Thumbscrew d ; e Screen through which the Rays pass to form Magnified Image on the Screen.

2. [cap.] Astron. = MICROSCOPIUM.

mi/cro-scop/ic (-skŏp/ĭk), a. 1. = MICROSCOPICAL, 1. 2. Like a microscope; able to see very minute objects.

> Why has not man a microscopic eye? Pope.

3. Very small ; visible only by the aid of a microscope.

mi/cro-scop/i-cal (-ĭ-kăl), a. 1. Of, pert. to, or conducted with, the microscope or microscopy ; microscopic.

2. = MICROSCOPIC, 3. Now Rare.

mi-cros/co-pist (mī-krŏs/kō-pĭst ; mī/krō-skō/pĭst ; 277), n. One who uses the microscope.

Mi/cro-sco/pi-um (-skō/pĭ-ŭm), n. [NL., fr. MICROSCOPE.] Astron. A modern constellation, south of Capricornus.

mi-cros/co-py (mī-krŏs/kō-pĭ ; mī/krō-skŏ/pĭ), n. The use of the microscope ; investigation with the microscope.

mi/cro-seism (mī/krō-sīs/m ; -sīz/m), n. [micro- + Gr. σεισμός an earthquake, fr. σείειν to shake.] A feeble earth tremor not directly perceptible, but detected only by means of specially constructed apparatus. — mi/cro-seis/mic (-sīs/mĭk ; -sīz/-), -seis/mi-cal (-mĭ-kăl), a.

mi/cro-seis-mom/e-ter (-mŏm/ē-tĕr), n. [microseism + -meter.] A seismometer for measuring amplitudes or periods, or both, of microseisms. — mi/cro-seis-mom/e-try (-trĭ), n.

mi/cro-some (mī/krō-sōm), n. [micro- + 2d -some.] Biol. One of the minute granules embedded in the ground substance of protoplasm, regarded by some as an essential part of its structure.

mi/cro-so/mi-a (mī/krō-sō/mĭ-ă), n. [NL.] Med. Abnormal smallness of the body.

mi/cro-spec-tros/co-py (-spĕk-trŏs/kō-pĭ ; -spĕk/trō-skō/pĭ), n. The spectroscopic scrutiny of minute objects ; use of the microspectroscope. — mi/cro-spec/tro-scop/ic (-spĕk/trō-skŏp/ĭk), a.

Mi/cro-spi/ra (-spī/rā), n. [NL. ; micro- + L. spira a coil.] Bacteriol. A genus of bacteria of the family Spirillaceæ, having one to three polar flagella. The most important pathogenic species is M. comma, the causative agent of Asiatic cholera. Most of the species are found in liquid media, some occurring in sea water.

mi/cro-spo-ran/gi-um (-spō-răn/jĭ-ŭm), n. ; L. pl. -gia (-ă). [NL. See MICRO- ; SPORANGIUM.] Bot. A sporangium with microspores, as, in seed plants, the pollen sac of the anther.

mi/cro-spo-ro/sis (-spō-rō/sĭs), n. [NL. ; microspore + -osis.] Veter. A form of ringworm affecting foals, characterized by the loss of hair in small round patches, esp. on the neck and head, and caused by a vegetable parasite.

mi/cro-stom/a-tous (-stŏm/ă-tŭs ; -stō/mă-) a. [micro- + Gr. στόμα, -ατος, mouth.] Having a small mouth.

mi/cro-sto/mi-a (mī/krō-stō/mĭ-ă), n. [NL. ; micro- + Gr. στόμα mouth.] Med. Abnormal smallness of the mouth, usually congenital.

mi/cro-struc/ture (-strŭk/tūr), n. Microscopic structure. — mi/cro-struc/tur-al (-tĭ), a.

mi/cro-sty/lous (mī/krō-stī/lŭs), a. Bot. Short-styled ; specif., having short styles and long filaments, as certain heterostyled flowers. Cf. MACROSTYLOUS, MESOSTYLOUS.

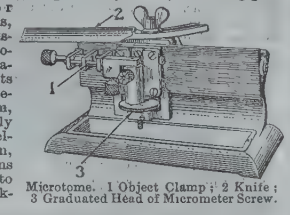
mi/cro-therm (mī/krō-thûrm), a. [micro- + Gr. θέρμη heat.] Bot. Any plant requiring a mean annual temperature between 14° and 0° C. for full growth. Such plants occur on the plains of the north temperate zone and in South America between 38° and 40° S. Cf. MEGATHERM, MESOTHERM.

mi/cro-tome (-tōm), n. [micro- + Gr. τομός cutting.] An instrument for cutting sections, as of organic tissues, for microscopic examination. The objects to be cut are sometimes first frozen, but are usually embedded in celloidin or paraffin, making sections of from .01 mm. to .005 mm. thickness possible.



Microtome. 1 Object Clamp ; 2 Knife ; 3 Graduated Head of Micrometer Screw.

mi/cro-tom/ic (-tŏm/ĭk), mi/cro-tom/i-cal (-ĭ-kăl), n. Of or pert. to the microtome or microtomy ; cutting thin slices.

mi-crot/o-my (mī-krŏt/ō-mĭ), n. Art of using the microtome, or of preparing, with its aid, objects for microscopic study. — mi-crot/o-mist (-ō-mĭst), n.

Mi-cro/tus (mī-krō/tŭs), n. [NL. ; micro- + Gr. οὖς, ὠτός, ear.] Zoöl. The typical genus of voles of the subfamily Microtinæ, including a great number of species inhabiting the Northern Hemisphere. See VOLE.

mi/cro-volt/ (mī/krō-vōlt/), n. Elec. A millionth of a volt.

mi/cro-zo/ō-spore (-zō/ō-spōr ; 201), n. Biol. A small motile spore ; — dist. from the macrozoöspores of the same species.

mi/cro-zyme (mī/krō-zīm), n. [micro- + Gr. ζυμη leaven.] Biol. A microörganism which is supposed to act like a ferment in causing or propagating certain infectious or contagious diseases ; a pathogenic bacterial organism.

mic/tu-rate (mĭk/tū-rāt), v. i. ; -RAT/ED (-rāt/ĕd) ; -RAT/ING (-rāt/ĭng). [See MICTURITION.] To urinate ; — etymologically incorrect in form and sense.

mic/tu-ri/tion (mĭk/tū-rĭsh/ŭn), n. [L. micturire to desire to make water, desiderative verb fr. mingere, mictum, to make water.] Desire to urinate ; also, a morbidly frequent passing of the urine, in consequence of disease ; also, incorrectly, act of urinating.

mid (mĭd), a. ; compar. wanting ; superl. MID/MOST (mĭd/mōst). [AS. midd ; akin to OS. middi, D. mid (in comp.), OHG. mitti, Icel. miðr, Goth. midjis, L. medius, Gr, μέσος, Skr. madhya, OIr. mide, n., middle. Cf. AMID, MIDDLE, MIDST, MEAN intermediate, MEDIATE, MEDIUM, MERIDIAN, MIZZEN, MOIETY.] 1. Denoting the middle part ; being the part in the middle or midst ; as, in mid ocean or mid-ocean.

2. Occupying a middle position ; middle ; as, the mid finger ; the mid hour of night. Now chiefly in combination (see MID-).

3. Phon. Formed or articulated with a somewhat elevated position of the active part of the tongue, in relation to the palate ; midway between high and low ; — said of certain vowel sounds, as ā (āle), ē (ēll), ō (ōld). See Guide to Pron., § 43.

in mid gear, Mach., in gear so that the effect of one eccentric neutralizes that of the other and no work is done in the cylinder ; — said of a steam engine with valves worked by a link motion, or of the link motion. — m. spoon. Golf. See SPOON. Brit. — mid-wall column, shaft, etc., one carrying a wall thicker than its own diameter and standing about midway between the front and back of the wall.

mid, n. Middle. Archaic or Dial. Eng. Shak.

mid-. A combining form of the adjective mid, used in an indefinite number of compounds ; as, specif. : a With nouns to denote the middle or middle part of the thing named ; as in mid-air, mid-channel, mid-age, midday, mid-land, etc. b With adjectives to denote belonging to the middle part (of the thing implied by the adjective) ; as mid-Atlantic ; mid-ocean ; mid-German ; *mid*facial. c Geom. To denote a circle inscribed in a triangle (a *mid*circle), or relation to such a circle ; as, *mid*center, *mid*radius.

mid/-air/, n. The region of the air midway between the clouds and the part near the ground.

Mi/das (mī/dăs), n. [L., fr. Gr. Μίδας.] 1. Gr. Myth. A king of Phrygia to whom, in gratitude for a kindness, Dionysus promised to grant anything he might ask. Midas asked that everything he touched might turn to gold, but, as even his food became thus changed, he begged the god to take his favor back. This was done by his bathing in the river Pactolus, which thereafter had golden sands. For his decision in a musical contest between Pan and Apollo in favor of the former, Apollo changed Midas's ears into ass's ears. These he hid under his cap, but his barber discovered them, and, to relieve himself of the secret, dug a hole into which he whispered, "King Midas has ass's ears," and then filled it up. A reed, however, grew there, which betrayed the secret by its whispers. Chaucer and Tennyson make it Midas's wife who could not keep the secret.

2. Zoöl. Syn. of LEONTOCEBUS.

Midas fly. Any fly of the dipterous family Midaidæ, which contains a small number of species, mostly American, resembling the robber flies, but with clavate antennæ.

Mi/das's-ear/ (mī/dăs-Iz), n. [See MIDAS.] A pulmonate mollusk (Auricula auris-midæ) ; — so called from its resemblance to an ass's ear.

mid/-bod/y, n. Biol. a In plant cells, the cell plate. b In dividing animal cells, a granular thickening of the spindle fibers at the equator of the spindle which probably represents the cell plate.

mid/-brain/, n. [mid, a. + brain.] The middle segment of the brain ; the mesencephalon. See BRAIN.

mid/day/ (mĭd/dā/), n. [AS. middæg. See MID, a., DAY.] 1. The middle part of the day ; noon.

2. Eccl. A certain canonical hour ; sext.

3. The south. Obs.

mid/day/, a. 1. Of or pertaining to noon ; meridional.

2. Of or pertaining to the south. Obs.

mid/den (mĭd/'n), n. Also midding. [ME. midding, of Scand. origin ; cf. Dan. mödding, mögdynge, dunghill ; mög dung + dynge heap. Cf. MUCK.] 1. A dunghill. Dial. Eng. or Archaic.

2. An accumulation of refuse about a dwelling place ; esp., a kitchen midden (which see).

mid/dle (mĭd/'l), a. [ME. middel, AS. middel ; akin to D. middel, OHG. mittil, G. mittel. See MID, a.] 1. Equally distant (as reckoned by numbers, space, or other particular) from the extremes either of a number of things or of one thing ; mean ; medial ; as, the middle house in a row ; a middle rank in life ; middle summer ; middle age.

2. Intermediate ; intervening ; mediating ; rarely, intermediary ; formerly, taking a middle course ; as, the middle space ; of middle size ; a middle opinion or ground.

> Will, seeking good, finds many middle ends. Sir J. Davies.

3. Of middle size, volume, or the like ; — now used only of wool of medium-length staple.

4. Philol. a Pertaining to or designating a form or voice mi/cro-rhab/dus (mī/krō-răb/dŭs), n. [NL. ; micro- + Gr. ῥάβδος rod.] Zoöl. A rod-shaped sponge spicule.

micros. Abbr. Microscopist ; microscopy.

Mi/cro-sau/ri-a (mī/krō-sô/rĭ-ă), n. pl. [NL. ; micro- + Gr. σαῦρος lizard.] Paleon. A group of extinct stegocephalians containing small salamanderlike forms. In a broader sense, equiv. to Lepospondyli. Some of its members are by some classed as reptiles. — mi/cro-sau/ri-an (-ăn), a. & n.

mi/cro-sclere (mī/krō-sklēr), mi/cro-scle/rous (-krŭs), a.

mi/cro-scope, v. t. To look at with or as with a microscope ; also, to magnify.

mi/cro-sco/pi-al (mī/krō-skō/pĭ-ăl), a. Microscopic. Rare.

mi/cro-scop/i-cal-ly, adv of MICROSCOPIC, MICROSCOPICAL.

mi/cro-scop/ics (-skŏp/ĭks), n. (See -ICS.) Microscopy.

mi/cro-sec/ond, n. Psychophysics. One thousandth of a second. Symbol, σ.

mi/cro-sec/tion, n. A thin section of anything for examination under the microscope.

mi/cro-seis/mo-met/ro-graph, n. A seismometrograph of great sensitiveness.

mi/cro-some (mī/krō-sōm), a. [micro- + Gr. σῶμα sign : cf. F. microsème.] SEE ORBITAL INDEX.

mi/cro-sep/tum (-sĕp/tŭm), n. [NL.] Zoöl. In anthozoans, a narrow or imperfect mesentery.

mi/cro-mat/ic (mī/krō-măt/ĭk), a. Zoöl. Having the organs of smell feebly developed.

mi/cro-so/ma (mī/krō-sō/mă), n. ; L. pl. -SOMATA (-sō/mă-tă). [NL.] Biol. A microsome.

mi/cro-som/mite (-sŏm/īt), n. [micro- + Somma, one of the volcanic peaks of Vesuvius.] Min. A mineral close to canerinite, in minute colorless hexagonal crystals.

Mi/cro-so/rex (-sō/rĕks ; 201), n. [NL. ; micro- + L. sorex shrewmouse.] Zoöl. A subgenus or genus of very small American shrews typified by Sorex hoyi, in which the fourth upper incisor is very minute.

mi/cro-spar/æ (-spär/mē), n. pl. [NL. See MICRO- ; lat SPERM.] Syn of ORCHIDALES mi/cro-sper/mous (-mŭs), a. Having very small seeds. Rare.

Mi/cro-sphæ/ra (-sfē/rā), n. [NL. ; micro- + Gr. σφαῖρα.] Bot. A genus of mildew fungi, as the lilac mildew (M. alni), which attack the leaves of various trees and shrubs. They have perithecia containing several asci.

mi/cro-sphere (mī/krō-sfēr), n. a Biol. The central region of the aster surrounding the centrosome. b Zoöl. The very small primordial chamber of certain Foraminifera.

mi/cro-spo-range (mī/krō-spō-răn/jĭ), n. = MICROSPORANGIUM.

mi/cro-spo/ro-phore (-spō/rō-fōr ; 201), n. Bot. = MICROSPORANGIUM.

mi/cro-stat (mī/krō-stăt), n. [micro- + Gr. ἱστάναι to make to stand.] Physics. A microscope attachment consisting of a stage and finder.

mi/cro-sthene (-sthēn), n. [micro- + Gr. σθένος strength.] Zoöl. One of an abandoned group of mammals (Mi-cros/thenes [mī-krŏs/thē-nēz]), including Insectivora, Chiroptera, Rodentia, and Edentata. — mi/cro-sthen/ic (mī/krō-sthĕn/ĭk), a.

mi-cros/to-ma (mī-krŏs/tō-mă), n. [NL.] = MICROSTOMIA mi/cro-stome, n. [micro- + -stome.] Bot. A small stoma, as the operculum in some mosses.

Mi-cros/ty-lis (mī-krŏs/tĭ-lĭs ; mī/krō-stī/lĭs), n. [NL. ; micro- + Gr. στυλίς, dim. of στῦλος pillar.] Syn. of ACHROANTHES.

mi/cro-sty/lo-spore, n. Bot. A small stylospore, as contrasted with others of the same species.

mi/cro-tech/nic, mi/cro-tech-nique/, n. Microscopic technic.

mi/cro-tel/e-phone, n. A telephone with a microphone transmitter. — mi/cro-tel/e-phon/ic, a.

mi-croth/e-os (mī-krŏth/ē-ŏs), n. [NL. ; micro- + L. mi-crotio, -onis, fr. Gr. θεός god.] A divine being or personality on a small scale.

mi-cro/ti-a (mī-krō/shĭ-ă), n. [NL. See MICROTUS.] Med. Congenital abnormal smallness of the ear.

Mi/cro-tĭ/næ (mī/krō-tī/nē), n. pl. [NL. See MICROTUS.] Zoöl. A subfamily of murines including the voles and lemmings.

mi/cro-tome, v. t. [micro- + -tome.] Biol. To cut in sections with a microtome.

mi/cro-zo-a/ri-a (-zō-ā/rĭ-ă ; 115), n. pl. [NL. ; micro- + Gr. ζωάριον, dim. of ζῷον animal.] Zoöl. Infusoria and other minute forms of animal life. — mi/cro-zo-a/ri-an (-ăn), a. & n. — mi/cro-zo/an (-ăn), a. & n.

mi/cro-zo/ic (-zō/ĭk), a. Microzoal.

micte. + might, pret. of MAY.

mic/tion (mĭk/shŭn), n. [L. micti-o, -onis, fr. L. mingere to urinate.] Urination.

micul. + MICKLE. [of MAY.]
